BY BOUTELLE & BURR. BANGOR, ME. SATURDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 1, 1890.—WITH SUPPLEMENT. VOL. LVII.—NUMBER 260.

Bright eyes and dull, near sighted; far sighted; anybody (except those who won't, and they are worse than blind) can see at a glance the advantages gained by using PEARLINE. We do not expect everyone will see it, but millions do, and the number increases every day

Delicate women and strong wonder at the amount of work they can do with the aid of PEARLINE—the time saved; the satisfactory results, and when they have used it for years they realize that everything that is washed or cleaned with PEARLINE lasts longer This is very simple—PEARLINE does away with most of the rubbing—the greatest wear and tear that clothes are subjected to is the repeated rubbings necessary to keep them clean with ordinary soap. Your own interests should lead you to use it, if you do your own work and value your fine linens and flannels; the latter reason should surely convince any bright woman that it is to her interest to see that her servants use it. PEARLINE makes a saving all around.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not. JAMES PYLE, New York.

Good Morning Have you used PEARS' SOAP?

BREWER LOCALS.

A cess pool is being built, at the head of the drain from Mann's store on Main street to the river.

The schooner Mary Stewart has been launched from the marine railway and the steamer Howell hauled out on the smaller railway for repairs.

The boys of the High School have invested in a foot ball and practice with it daily. As a subject for argument it has proved very efficient, but unless they stop arguing and play foot ball, as on-looker remarked the other day, they will never be able to contend with other players.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of South Brewer are arranging for an interesting series of meetings in their chapel each evening next week, commencing to-morrow evening. Appropriate and interesting subjects will be taken for each evening, and active workers from both cities will be present to assist in the work.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Jane B. Moody took place from the residence of Mr. J. H. Smith, on Holyoke street, yesterday afternoon at two o'clock. Rev. F. C. Rogers, pastor of Grace church, of which the deceased was a member, officiated in his usual beautiful manner. The remains were taken to Mount Hope for burial

Rev. C. M. Perry is arranging for an interesting course of six lectures to begin in aid of the church. The lectures are proposed to begin week after next and in addition to Mr. Perry the speakers are to be Professors J. S. Sewall, L. F. Stearns and F. B. Denio, of the Seminary, Rev. G. W. Field, D. D., and Rev. B. B. Merrill. The speakers are all very interesting and the lectures should be well attended.

Some mischievous boys recently lighted some matches and placed them beneath the door of the schoolhouse in the Page district, where Mrs Barker, the teacher, discovered them the next morning, partly burned. She kept the matches and showed them to School Agent Hall. If there are any more such pranks cut up and the offenders can by any means be discovered, it will go hard with them

Rev. F. E. Whitham, pastor of the M. E. church, begins Sunday evening a month's course of pictorial sermons, illustrated with large pulpit paintings. Subject for the month—"Wise and Foolish." November 2d, Wise and Foolish Virgins; November 9th, Wise and Foolish Virgins, (continued); November 16th, Wise and Foolish House Builders; November 23d, The Rich Fool. A collection will be taken at the close of each of these sermons to defray expenses.

Mr. George P. Aiken, the jeweller, has arranged the wires of the synchronized clock in his establishment by which Brewer people regulate their clocks and watches, so that there will be no farther trouble such as was experienced a short time ago. The wires would occasionally become crossed with an electric wire, and the current, running into the clock would cause it to set itself at the wrong time and as the regular time for setting is noon, it would often happen that the clock would all at once move its hands backward or forward, thus making it a poor thing to depend on. Mr. Aiken remedied the matter by removing the insulation on two opposite places on the wires, placing a piece of connecting wire across, thus making a short circuit and preventing the changing of the clock until noon, when the cross-wire is removed long enough for the clock to be properly set.

Sunday Services.

First M. E. church, Rev. F. E. Whitham, pastor. Preaching at 10.30 A. M., by Rev. G. B. Illsley; Sunday school at 12; Epworth League prayer meeting at 6 P. M. in large vestry; pictorial sermon illustrated with large pulpit paintings at 7, subject, "Wise and Foolish Virgins."

South Brewer Congregational church, Rev. C. M. Perry, pastor. Preaching at 10.30 by the pastor; Sabbath school at 12; Y. P. S. C. E. meeting at 6.30; chapel service at 7.30.

First Congregational church, Rev. B. B. Merrill, pastor. Preaching at 10.30, by the pastor; Sunday school at 11 45; Y. P. S. C. E. consecration meeting at 6; missionary concert at 7.

Danger.

We would again call the special attention of the parents of small children of allowing their children to play on the track of the street railway and also the necessity of impressing on their minds that they must always keep entirely off of the track. What might have been a serious, if not fatal accident was prevented by the complete control of one of the motor-men over his car yesterday. As the car was running along up the line from South Brewer, a number of children were seen playing just above Mr. Robert Davis' house, where the down grade toward the bridge over Dyer's cove commences and as the car passed the summit of the grade and commenced to go down, the power was nearly shut off and the brake put on, otherwise there must have been an accident. as one of the children pushed another, only about seven years old, down over the bank, which here is about three feet high, and upon the track when the car was but a length off.

The little fellow did not realize his danger, although he was looking right at the car as it came towards him and not until the motor man, who had clapped the brake on with all his strength, called sharply to him to get off the track, did he start to climb up over the bank, the front and nearly touching him as it passed, while the whole car was passed, before he reached the walk. It was a narrow escape for the little fellow and the driver of the car, as well as a gentleman who stood on the front platform and saw it all, expected nothing less than to see him go under the wheels, the shock to both of them being great. The other children seemed to think it all a huge joke and girls thirteen years old should be taught better than to push their little companions on to a track of any kind, especially when a car is approaching.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Action of the Penobscot Bar on the Death

Of the Late Lewis Barker and Joseph G. Wilson.

Memorial services were held yesterday forenoon in the court room and resolutions were offered on the deaths of the late Hon. Lewis Barker and Judge J. C. Wilson, members of Penobscot Bar, which held a meeting before Court opened and accepted the resolutions.

When Court came in, about ten o'clock, in addition to a number of our citizens occupying seats outside, there were seated within the bar, in addition to those who participated in the exercises, Mr. Nathaniel Barker, of Exeter, a brother of the late Mr. Barker, Hon C W Vose, Hon. F. H. Appleton, C. A. Woodard, A. L. Simpson, P. H. Gillan, I. W Davis, Matthew Laughlin, C A Cushman, P. G. White and Henry Hudson, Esquires, while ex Chief Justice Appleton occupied a seat beside Judge Haskell.

In opening Court Judge Haskell said: "The Court is ready to hear anything which may be presented relative to deceased members of the Bar."

HON. LEWIS BARKER

Hon. F. A. Wilson then presented the following resolutions to the Court:

The committee appointed to give suitable expression to the feelings of the members of the Penobscot Bar, caused by the sudden death of the late Hon. Lewis Barker, who for about fifty years was a member of this Bar, have prepared and submit the following minute and resolution and recommend its adoption by the Bar and presentation to this court.

At noon on the ninth day of this month, the Hon. Lewis Barker, one of the oldest and best-known members of the Penobscot Bar, by an accident, was summoned from this life, and in the possession of his faculties, though not without physical suffering, met death calmly and heroically.

The death of so prominent a member of the Bar, so effective an advocate, and so brilliant a political orator, would under any circumstances cause a deep sensation in professional ranks, but the manner of his death awakened profound sensation and deep sympathy for those bereaved by his death among all classes of citizens.

Therefore, it is Resolved: That the Penobscot Bar desires to express its appreciation of the great abilities of the Hon. Lewis Barker, who for many years has occupied a position in the front rank of advocates in this county, and who will long be remembered within these walls for his fervid rhetoric, his pungent wit and sarcasm, aided by the graces of form and voice, and his brilliant and effective oratory

That this Bar recalls with satisfaction his ringing words of patriotism during the war and the splendid service he rendered to the cause of loyalty and liberty.

We would also bear witness to his touching devotion to his sick wife and son, his tender and watchful ministrations to them and to the liberal and indulgent hand with which he anticipated the wants of those dependent upon him, discharging well all the obligations of a husband and father.

And to those of his family who, by this sudden stroke, have been deprived of his counsel and companionship, this Bar, in common with the public, extends its sympathy and condolence.

Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family by the Clerk of the Bar.

HON. A. W. PAINE.

Hon. A. W. Paine, President of the Bar, then spoke as follows:

May it please your Honor:

By request of the committee having charge of these memorial exercises, on occasion of the death of our Brother Lewis Barker, I rise to offer a few words in memory of a highly valued friend, whose loss I can not but deplore. Our mutual acquaintance commenced a half century ago, when he was a student in the office of Kent & Cutting, and has continued uninterrupted ever since until his death, no word of an unpleasant character having ever passed between us. He was admitted to the bar in 1841 and at once commenced practice in Stetson, where he remained until his removal to Bangor in 1871. At the early age of five years he was, by the accidental death of his father, left an orphan to fight the battle of life upon his own strength and resources. By personal effort and perseverance he acquired an academical education, which led to his study of the law as already suggested. Starting out into business without any inherited means, he gradually, by industry and economy, acquired a handsome estate, such as gave him the character of a man of wealth, with the means of enjoying the comforts of life and such as to leave his family with the like enjoyment. A son and daughter resulted from his early marriage relation, both of whom have preceded to the silent land. For many years he remained a quiet practitioner of his profession and but little known beyond the sphere of his practice, until the war of the rebellion when he resolved to give voice to his loyal feelings and help on the cause of his country. Taking advantage of one of those enthusiastic meetings which so often met in Old Norembega in the early period of the war, he, uninvited, arose from his seat and addressed the Chairman who in reply was obliged to inform him of the programme for the evening, which necessarily excluded him from proceeding. A second effort was in like manner ineffectual. Nothing daunted however he awaited the close of the prescribed order when at the late hour of ten o'clock he was recognized by the Chairman and proceeded with his remarks. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, he soon succeeded in so enchaining the attention of his audience as to hold the crowd unbroken to his close.

From that time forward he never found it necessary to seek an opportunity to be heard, when he had aught to say in public. Thenceforth he became famed as an orator, whose service was sought far and wide, not only at home or in his native State, but in other States of the East and to the far West. In the Presidential canvasses following, he became one of the best known speakers, often found in different States among the leading Representatives and Senators of the country, taking high rank with them and other leading members of his party. At the last political meeting of his party in our late election campaign, his presence being noted he was loudly called for to make a speech, though under the circumstances he respectfully declined.

The character thus acquired naturally led to the bestowal of party honors, and as a result he was twice sent as delegate to the Presidential nominating Conventions, in the last of which he was a member of the Committee of Resolutions to report a National Republican platform. In 1864 he held a seat in the House of Representatives of his State, and during the two succeeding terms in the Senate, where, in 1867, he was again sent to the lower House and held the position of Speaker. In 1869 he was again elected as member of the House, and for three years he held a seat in the Executive Council of the State [illegible] was also member of the State Board of Health. The faithful and competent manner in which he performed the duties of all these various places of honor and trust is fully evidenced by the continued repetition of his appointments as now detailed.

As member of the Bar our brother always maintained a lucrative practice and held the confidence of his clients whom he ever faithfully served. Of courteous and honorable habits he also held a high place in the regards of his brethren of the profession.

As member of society and citizen of the community he was eminently a man of high social and intellectual character, intelligent and agreeable as a companion, distinguished for his integrity and honorable dealings.

Among his various qualities he shared with his brother David a poetical view of thought and sentiment, though the public have never had an opportunity to judge of its true merits or extent. It is hoped they may have that privilege by a posthumous publication of some at least of his effusions.

Our brother had a strong faith in the future life and of its nearness in locality to the life on earth and it was, without doubt, that, amidst the unimaginable sufferings which he must have endured during the few hours which he lived after the accident, he bore the whole with such patience and fortitude as he exhibited by reason of the confidence he had in the belief which he entertained. He unquestionably felt that he was passing through that "covered bridge," at the other end of which his parents and children and other friends awaited his coming, ready to receive him.

The resolutions which have now been presented by the committee it is hoped will be adopted by the Court as expressive of the sentiments of the Bar.

F. A. WILSON, ESQ.

At the conclusion of the remarks by President Paine, F. A. Wilson, Esq., addressed the Court in the following remarks:

"It is as natural to die as to be born," said Lord Bacon in his essay on death, and the truth of the saying cannot be disputed, but at the same time it must be said that the naturalness of the event has not deprived it of its mystery, nor has its certainty robbed it of a certain degree of dread, which attaches to it in the minds of the young and the middle aged, although disease, grief, and the weariness of old age may and often do, make death a welcome event, and spiritual exaltation, the product of deep religious faith illumining the way to the grave, may cause one to exclaim, as did the great preacher, "Oh death, where is thy sting?"

And yet it is all absolutely a mystery and it seems fitting that when this deepest of all mysteries occurs in our fraternity, and one who has been accustomed to go in and out amongst us in the fulness of health and in the enjoyment of unusual endowment of natural gifts suddenly joins the silent majority, we should pause in the midst of our labors, cease from our contentions, and come together, reviving the memories of the life that is past, and scanning the record that is closed.

I speak advisedly and reverently of death as a mystery. Science, history, and experience when questioned as to whence this life came, whither it has gone, and how the subtle contact with the things of sense was broken, alike confess their inability to answer the questions, although faith may say a beacon illumine the future, and shed rays of comfort over the lives of its votaries.

Such exercises as these are no innovation. The ancients on the occasion of memorial exercises for the dead, had a motto "Nil de mortuis nisi bonum!" "Speak nothing but good of the dead," and we cannot improve upon it, and whilst we do not attribute to the dead virtues which they did not possess, thus changing a beautiful ceremonial into a mockery of truth and a travesty of virtue, let us with respectful decorum contemplate what was best and most striking in the life and character of the departed, thus perhaps aiding to shed some comfort upon two homes made desolate, and lead the members of the Bar whose ranks have within one short year been invaded by the death of Father and Son to profitable contemplation of the correct object and aim of life.

When a half year ago the son was summoned, we were impressed most with the idea that a young man of bright parts, a lawyer of brilliant achievements and more brilliant prospects, had been called "out of season"

Parents, wife, children, associates, felt that the blow was one of the inscrutable workings of an over-ruling Power, the wisdom of which could not be discovered by mortal ken, and now that the father has so soon followed, the tragic circumstances of his death startles all this new manifestation of the same Power.

Going out from his own home in the morning, almost within sight of his invalid wife, affection for whom strong in youth, had grown with his growth and strengthened with his strength, ripening into absolute devotion;—so near to his beloved grandchildren whose welfare was so near his heart, that the crash of the accident could have been heard by them, our brother Lewis Barker received his death wound and died at noon.

How many of us on that sad day intuitively uttered the beautiful and expressive language of the liturgy of the church, "From battle, murder, and from sudden death, Good Lord, deliver us."

Lewis Barker was a man of mark, and that mark so far as the public is concerned was made after 186., although he was admitted to the Bar in 1841.

Not for twenty years, if conscious of the power of oratory that was in him, did he exercise it, and I have wondered whether, if the civil war had not occurred calling forth from all patriots latent powers and sacrifices born of intense feeling, our brother would have attained the eminence as an advocate at this bar and as a political speaker, which he certainly enjoyed.

From 1861 for twenty years I met him as an opponent every term of court, and many times each term, and I think I had an opportunity within the heat of these controversies, and in the few years since that we have both been trying gradually to throw off labor, to form an estimate of his abilities in the line of his profession.

Bro. Barker's forte was undoubtedly as a jury advocate. To that branch of the profession his capacity and tastes turned him, and therein his ambition found its sweetest satisfaction. He was himself of a nervous, sanguine, emotional temperament, and skillfully appealed to the emotional side of his hearers, and this gave him success also as a political speaker, as well as before juries.

His imagination was rich, sometimes riotously so, and when his sympathies were fully excited his flow of language was something wonderful, and the words would pour from his lips like a torrent.

The faithful, earnest lawyer identifies himself with his client and with his cause. He must do so. We have on more than one occasion known of lawyers who could not avoid coming to regard opposing counsel and adverse parties as personal enemies during the trial of the case. With the sanguine lawyer this is not a matter of choice. It is beyond his control.

If our Brother Barker in the exercise of his wonderful gifts has occasionally ruffled our equanimity, or excited our envy it passed away with the adjournment of Court, leaving no trace and no bitterness, and our clients, if wise, would imitate our example in this regard.

I should pity the small soul that in the presence of death could cherish and harbor petty resentments, and I am sure that none, of our fraternity does so. This man has been removed to a higher Court.

I think that a close analysis of Brother Barker's character would develop the fact that his good, two distinct natures or sides. The [illegible] man [illegible] a very [illegible]. Bro. Barker was in his office and in the management of his personal affairs [illegible] him a beggar. His caution caused him to make wise preparation for a rainy day.

His ardent affection for his family would, unrestrained, have ruined those he loved best by over-indulgence, but a wise and prudent forethought came to the rescue in season to impress upon those looking up to him the value of self-control.

His emotions led him to denounce; whilst reflection often led him to apologize.

He was warm to his friends, cold to his enemies. He was a man of great wit but not always in a mood to use it, and sometimes the victim of melancholy, the cause of which he could not define. By nature of poetic instincts; in the conduct of life eminently prosaic and practical He declared himself a coward as to physical pain, but at last met death, through pain, with calmness and heroism.

HON. D. F. DAVIS

May it please your Honor.

I am glad to avail myself of the opportunity to add a few words to what has been so well said regarding the life and services of Mr. Barker. I have known him for thirty-five years. I first knew him when we both lived in the town of Stetson, in the place where he passed the larger part of his active life It was among the people who knew him best. Now that he has passed away, I can bear witness to the high esteem in which he was held in that community. He was respected for his public spirit, for his kindness as a father and husband, as a good neighbor, and for his patriotism in the trying days of the war.

I remember when a boy, about the time when the dark clouds were gathering in our Southern skies, that Mr. Barker came to the front as a public speaker. That was just before the war broke out, and I remember with what eagerness we all attended public meetings when Mr. Barker was to address the people. I remember, a little later, when the storm in all its fury burst upon the country and the recruiting sergeant first came into our midst, that Mr. Barker made an offer of two hundred dollars to the first man who would enlist. That was before the day of bounties. When the first man enlisted, he was paid the money promised, and from that day until the war closed, and until all the great questions growing out of the war were settled, Mr. Barker's voice was continually heard for the Union and the cause of human rights.

Those of us who were acquainted with him know the great service he rendered the country. His services were required every year in political campaigns in this and in other States, and he told me at one time that he never received pay for any services as rendered Some years ago, I met a gentleman from Pennsylvania who said that of all the public speakers who came to that State, no one was listened to with so much pleasure and admiration as Lewis Barker, of Maine.

I went into Mr. Barker's office as a student of law in 1867 and was admitted to practice in this court from his office. Since that time I have known him well and have had much to do with him in the trial of causes.

I have been particularly impressed with what Brother Wilson has said regarding his temperament He was an emotional man with a most vivid imagination and a poetic vein in his nature characteristic of his race. He was an able and an eloquent advocate possessed of strong common sense, which generally brought him to correct conclusions As a business man I never knew one more methodical and exact. I noted this from the first day I went into his office and those traits characterized him through life

Mr. Barker was a man who stood out alone from other men. No matter where he went, whether among his own people, in the halls of legislation or in other States as a public speaker, he was always prominent. Strong in his likes and dislikes, he had some enemies and many friends. He was a member of this bar for nearly or quite fifty years and by his death Penobscot Bar loses one of its most prominent members.

I desire to add a word more in regard to Mr. Barker's family relations. Living in the same town, in the same school district, I knew the family well. His talented daughter, Eva, who now sleeps at Mount Hope, was a school mate of mine and his equally talented son, Lewis A., was a student for several terms under my instruction. A loving and lovable boy, a brilliant lawyer, a young man generally liked, he laid down the burden of life young, leaving his father in the shadow of a great sorrow out of which he never came.

Mr. Barker is dead. The son and the daughter have passed from earth leaving the childless widow mid the graves of her loved ones. Bowed down by the weight of her sorrow, we extend to her our most heartfelt sympathies. In this hour of her sore bereavement, in the words of her daughter Eva, written more than twenty years ago, we commend her to Him who doeth all things well.

"I thank Him for these peaceful hours,
For Sorrow rightly sent, tho' born with pain
From life's calm height, by keenest anguish won
I see rich promises gleam forth anew.
Fresh possibilities awaken where
Hopes, fair to see, were crushed. God always are best.
In these, my later hours, I feel the truth,
The wisdom, love and justice of His plan
In spirit and in truth I praise His name."

JUDGE JOSEPH C. WILSON

George T. Sewall, Esq., of Old Town, then presented the following resolutions on the death of the late Judge Joseph C. Wilson:

Resolved, That the members of the Penobscot Bar greatly regret the death of our late brother, Joseph C. Wilson, endeared to us by his genial disposition and unfailing kindliness which characterized all his associations with us. We desire to express our appreciation of his innate and steadfast integrity, his honorable and faithful care for the interests of his clients, his natural and constant courtesy in all his professional and social intercourse. As judge of the Old Town Municipal Court, he was impartial, firm and wise; as a citizen, active and public-spirited; as a lawyer, an earnest and efficient attorney and careful counsellor; in his family, devoted and kind; warm and steadfast in his friendship and irreproachable in his fulfillment of all the duties of life.

Resolved, That we offer to his family and his parents our sincere sympathy in their loss; and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to them.

REMARKS OF GEO. T. SEWALL, ESQ.

Mr. Sewall began his remarks on the late Judge Wilson by referring to the early life of Mr. Wilson, who was born in Orono, March 22d, 1845. He was graduated at Bowdoin college in 1867 and after reading law with his father, Hon Nathaniel Wilson, he was admitted to the bar in 1871 and began the practice of his profession. He made many warm friends by his cheerfulness of disposition, frankness of manner, unaffected courtesy and warmhearted and steadfast adherence to his friends. He has held at various times positions of honor and of public and private trust in Orono.

In 1887 he was appointed Judge of the municipal court of Old Town by Gov. Bodwell when he removed to that town. No one had any intercourse with him without feeling the charm of his sympathetic courtesy and the attraction of his kindly temper. For such a disposition it naturally followed that for him the highest pleasure lay within the circle of his home and in the love of his family. He felt for his wife and children an affection which the daily routine of life could never rob of its freshness; and his completest rest from the cares of business and the vexations which more or less beset his official and professional labors was found by him at home.

As a Judge, he was impartial, accurate and conscientious, and his appointment was a very acceptable one to all his associates. It is such a [illegible] to say that [illegible] esteem and friendship which grew with their increasing intimacy with him.

As his lingering illness approached its end, he faced the unknown mysteries of death quietly and without fear, resting firmly in the belief of a conscious existence hereafter.

I think one of the most noticeable traits of his character lay in his fairness of mind and largeness of heart; he had no petty dislikes, he seldom showed any prejudices He had indeed a keen sense of injustice and felt its sting more sharply and longer than a less sensitive man might do.

REMARKS OF H. L. MITCHELL, ESQ.

General H. L. Mitchell's remarks on the late Joseph C. Wilson were as follows:

May it please the Court:

I have the honor to second the resolutions offered by Brother Sewall in behalf of the Bar as a token of respect to the memory of our departed brother, Judge Joseph C. Wilson, and in doing so I feel that I should not be doing justice to my feelings did I fail on this occasion to offer a tribute of my love and respect for the memory of our beloved Brother Wilson. My acquaintance with Brother Wilson began when he was a student more than twenty years ago. Our relations since have been of the most agreeable nature.

I think I can safely say that Bro. Wilson and myself, for several years, occupied positions that brought him into closer relations with me than with any other member of this Bar, save his father, our respected Bro. Nathaniel Wilson. I have known him well as a citizen, as a member of this Bar, and as a beloved member of my military staff, and it can with truth be said of him, he was an honest man, unselfish, fair minded, a close student, a thoughtful lawyer and judge.

It was my pleasure to assist in procuring his appointment as Judge of the court in Old Town, in 1887 I shall not soon forget the pleasure I experienced in having an opportunity to give my evidence before Governor Bodwell relative to the character, ability and fitness of Bro. Wilson for the position in question.

Of his subsequent record as judge I can assuredly say it was of the highest order It was my pleasure to transact considerable legal business with Brother Wilson and I ever found him kindly disposed but very decided in protecting the rights of his client.

It is sad indeed that a man so much respected and beloved, with so much natural and acquired ability, with so many opportunities opening before him to be of service to his fellow men, yes, with such a bright future before him, should be taken from us in the prime of life, but such was the decree of Him who doeth all things well, and it is our duty to submit to His will without a murmur.

Permit me to further express my love and respect in the words of the poet

Whose hearts whose truth was proven
Like thine, are laid in earth
There should a wreath be woven
To tell the world their worth

HON. C. A. BAILEY.

County Attorney Bailey wished to add a word of his respect and appreciation for Judge Wilson. He was a frequent visitor at his home in Orono He was first and always impressed with the fondness and devotion of the members of that family for each other. Wherever he was met, under whatever circumstances, his geniality and kindness of disposition always showed itself. He abhorred two-facedness; was always open and frank. Never obtrusive, and very careful of the feelings of others He was rather too retiring and for this reason he never rose higher. When he had a case which seemed greater than he could handle himself, he never hesitated to call in the help of more efficient lawyers, that his clients might not suffer. He was all that was kind and stood in the very closest relations with his family. As a friend Mr Bailey felt his loss very deeply, but his loss was nothing as compared with the loss to his aged parents, whose home circle has often been broken before

JUDGE HASKELL'S RESPONSE

In obedience to a time honored custom, it gives me pleasure to order the resolutions of the Bar enrolled among the records of the court, the forum where our dead brothers strove with their adversaries and gained high rank in their profession. One, cut down in "life's green spring," the other in the "sear and yellow leaf."

I will not attempt their eulogies, that has been completely done by their loving brothers, peculiarly fitted for the work

Brother Barker's sudden and unnatural death startles and reminds us how—

"Death, like an overflowing stream,
Sweeps us away, our life's a dream
An empty tale; a morning flower,
Cut down and withered in an hour."

Respect for the memory of our dead brothers requires that the court shall now adjourn.

Rolfe N. is now six years old and in splendid condition for development, he having been used but little in the stud and never trained to any extent. He is strong and spirited, stands sixteen hands high, and is a model horse. Mr. C. H. Nelson is anxious to have him, and says he can easily put him into the thirty list the first season He has been trying for some time to get Mr Neal to let him have the horse.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, the authoress, a few years ago was accustomed to visit friends then residing in Auburn. One of her characteristics is an abnormal sensitiveness to noise. One mouse gnawing at the wainscot sets her wild. Mrs Phelps is now Mrs. Ward and this winter will live at Winchester Highlands, Mass., where nobody ever heard any noise. Those who realize how much the author of "Gates Ajar" has suffered from annoying noises in several of her places of residence will hope that she may be more fortunate in the new home she has chosen.

Aroostook.

Potatoes were selling in Houlton on Wednesday, at $1.75 to $1.85 per barrel.

A Mr. Watson, who lives in the Foxcroft district, often drives into Houlton with loads of produce drawn by three horses abreast.

One result of the new tariff has been to shut out, to a great extent, Canadian potatoes, and in consequence New York and Philadelphia are beginning to look to Aroostook to supply the deficiency. Both cities are already represented in Houlton by several buyers.

There was shipped from Fort Fairfield station, for the week ending October 25, the following produce: Potatoes 93 cars, shingles 20, starch 19, sheep 6, cattle 1, miscellaneous 5; total 144 cars.

B. M. York's starch factory at Caribou, caught fire, a few days since, but the flames were confined to the interior. There were six tons of starch in the house. The loss is estimated at $1,100.

Rev. Amasa Loring, who died at Yarmouthville, Tuesday, had been in his usual health. About four o'clock in the afternoon he sat down, the book he had been reading, and apparently went to sleep in his chair. A little later it was found he had passed away without a pain or struggle.

Fishermen arriving at Portland report the weather on the Grand Banks as having been a series of gales since September 1st, affording a very few fish days. The schooner Golden Hope, which was launched at North Sydney, Cape Breton, during this leathery-weathery weather, paid $6,000 to be hauled off.

The Penobscot Shore Line has already commenced operations on the railway wharf at Rockland with a view to its complete renovation The old buildings are being torn down and all the decayed upper portions of the wharf are being removed A large extension is to be made at the end of the wharf to the southward, the whole wharf to be put in complete repair by another season It is reported that the steamer City of Richmond will be taken off the route between Portland and Rockland and run in connection with the Shore Line between Rockland, Bar Harbor and Machias It is also rumored that a larger boat will be run between Rockland and St. John Waldo.

Rarely since the war has there been so much excitement in Belfast as has been caused by the work of the Good Templars through Mr. Hassard, a member of the committee of seven of Bangor, and Liquor Constable Files, of Thorndike, and County Attorney Runnels. So effective has been their work that in Belfast, in particular, and practically all Waldo county, the prohibitory law is thoroughly enforced. There is squirming among those who have been in the business, or who have bought liquor and who may be summoned as witnesses, or such of those as are left; for from thirty to fifty, it is said, have left the county Some being in Boston, some a fishing and others down east after deer. As has been said, the Mayor was summoned and he appeared before the grand jury, as did also other officers of equal prominence while the recently elected democratic county attorney Mr Brown was put upon the rack for an afternoon, a night and part of the next day He refused to testify, said he should soon be a county officer, argued with the grand jury and all hands wanted to talk the matter over with Judge Walton and finally was obliged to tell what he knew and went away in a cold sweat Gentlemen here say he is a temperance man personally, all speak well of him, only in the days of electioneering they say he grew a little careless. The grand jury has been in session now for eight days In all, over one hundred witnesses have been called from Northport, Brooks, Searsmont Searsport, Belmont, Morrill Brooks Winterport, Stockton Springs, Unity, Troy and Frankfort, and more were to appear Thursday

Scrofula

Is the most ancient and most general of all diseases. Scarcely a family is entirely free from it, while thousands everywhere are its suffering slaves. Hood's Sarsaparilla has had remarkable success in curing every form of scrofula. The most severe and painful running sores, swellings in the neck or goitre, humor in the eyes, causing partial or total blindness yield to the powerful effects of this medicine.

The Worst Type.

"My son was afflicted with the worst type of scrofula, and on the recommendation of my druggist I gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla. Today he is sound and well, notwithstanding it was said there was not enough medicine in Illinois to effect a cure." J. Carpenter, Illipolis, Ill. Be sure to get

BOUTELLE & BURR, PROPRIETORS.

C. A. BOUTELLE, Editor.

All business letters should be addressed to Boutelle & Burr, and communications intended for publication should be addressed: "Editor of Whig and Courier."

SATURDAY NOVEMBER 1, 1890.

Gov. Brackett turned the lights on Candidate Russell at an immense meeting in Worcester, Thursday night, and when he had finished the paid attorney of the lobby was flattened out very thin.

In South Carolina a brute in human form attended a Republican meeting and becoming enraged at some thing said by the speaker, a colored candidate for Congress, drew a knife and slashed the speaker across the face, inflicting what it is feared will prove a fatal wound. He would have murdered the man on the spot, but for the interference of a spectator who also received several wounds from the assassin's knife. The man was arrested and placed under $100 bonds. This is justice as administered by South Carolina Bourbons.

In his Indiana speech Mr. Blaine among other things said: "When a man says to you that you are injured and pinched in your daily living in consequence of this tariff, ask him if you did not pay more for things under free trade than you do now. I think it a good question to put to every Democrat—what did you pay for calico? What did you pay for clothing in 1850, 7, 8 and 9? How does it compare with what you have paid in 1887, 8, 9 and 90? Congress has taken another step and has vindicated the reputation of the Republican party, which is always ready to take a step forward and at the time the step should be taken."

We notice that some of our exchanges predict that in the next Maine election we shall have the secret ballot. This may prove to be the fact, but we doubt it. At the coming session of the Legislature if this question is introduced again, the advocates of the system must show the necessity for the change in this State. It matters not what other states have done the only question being is the change necessary in Maine. Thus far the advocates of the system have been singularly unfortunate in this respect, and we believe the people, as a rule, are satisfied that they secure a free and fair expression of their preferences under the present election laws.

Democratic Lawlessness

Some time ago the Federal Department of Justice appointed William Allen of Little Rock Arkansas, special agent to visit Lee county and interrogate persons of that county as to their knowledge of facts relating to election frauds of 1888 in Mr. Featherton's Congressional District. Numerous persons have been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury and their cases will come on for hearing at the November term of the Federal Court. To subpoena several hundred witnesses in order to secure those conversant with the facts would have entailed great expense on the Government, to avoid which, Allen was detailed to hunt up the evidence necessary. He was accompanied by Deputy Marshal Faulkinbury who had a large number of summonses to serve. No sooner had these officers begun their work than they were waited on by a number of Democrats and threatened with swift and summary punishment unless they at once left the county.

At first the officers paid no attention to threats. The Democrats then held secret meetings, armed themselves and followed the officers from house to house, making the most violent threats and using language calculated to provoke a quarrel. The men from whom the officers got a conveyance was ordered by the mob to refuse further assistance on pain of death, and when the officers applied to the livery stables or horses they were refused. Friends of the Government warned the officers that they would certainly be killed and advised them to abandon the work.

When this information reached the Department of Justice the government ordered Marshal Spellman to proceed at once to Lee County and take a sufficient number of deputies to enforce the process and to execute the orders of the department. Fifteen deputies accompanied the marshal, and up to the present no further hostile demonstrations are reported, although monster mass meetings are held every day and resolutions adopted of the most revolutionary nature. The newspapers of Lee County are endeavoring to give a partisan tinge to the conduct of the Federal authorities, while the law-abiding citizens of the county are rejoiced to know that the government proposes to let no guilty man escape.

The Proposed Hospital

We publish below a communication upon the subject of establishing a general hospital in Bangor. We can say that considerable contributions to such an enterprise are already promised by well known citizens, and we understand that a movement is on foot to call a meeting of all who are interested in the discussion of the matter.

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier:

The introduction by your issue of October 30th of a contemplated movement for the establishment of a hospital has presented to the public a subject worthy of the most earnest consideration and should bring forth through your columns expressions from all interested in an object so worthy and necessary.

The advantages of a hospital are to be looked upon as the greatest charity a human being can furnish to his fellowman. The well man has it within his power to aid himself, but when his strength is gone through disease or accident, he looks at those about him for help, and if the means of support are gone he must submit to enrollment on the pauper list, which deprives him of the right of suffrage.

But aside from the forcible argument of charity, which must ever be the foundation upon which such a movement can be carried to success, let us look to the need for such an institution. This section of our State has even now become the centre of a railroad system. Local energy has already increased our manufacturing interests, thus introducing as in other manufacturing places an element deserving of hospital care in time of need. As a city increases the busy walks of life are filled with a greater number of dangers of accident as is seen by the daily history of our larger cities.

It is often I am told that within the homes of the poorer classes there are unfortunates, who, for the lack of proper surroundings, cannot receive such care as their case demands, and not having means cannot be transported to distant charities. It is not infrequent that a servant perhaps from some distant part requires the prolonged attention of the household and doctor. For such, a hospital would furnish the needed advantage. Physicians generally regard the movement with favor for it relieves them often of a class of cases where they not only give advice but are put to expense by the demands of the case, and it also could furnish them with opportunities for such paying patients as might prefer local skill and trained attendants. The objection that people will take advantage of a charity who can afford to pay for services can be met by the decided and energetic refusal on the part of the proper authority to allow such proceedings.

For the consummation of a scheme so beneficial it is highly necessary that those recognizing its need should come forward and give their time and money in aid of the project, selecting from their number the ablest representatives to determine the needs of the city, the best methods for obtaining an endowment fund and for taking the necessary action for incorporation. When this may have been accomplished a Hospital Aid Society could be established into whose hands might be given the duty of raising funds and material to assist in the work of the hospital when in operation.

FIVE CENTS.

Less than five cents a day put aside during the 365 days of this year, will buy for a young man of thirty, a thousand dollars of Life Insurance. A little over thirty cents a day will provide the man of forty with five thousand dollars, and a dollar a day will yield him over fifteen thousand. Nine out of ten of the men whose eye this reaches can spare enough during this year to take some life insurance.

We have but one question to ask "Can the money be so wisely spent in any other way?"

TRUE'S PIN WORM ELIXIR

A WONDERFUL REMEDY!

MARVELOUS IN ITS EFFECTS

Mothers save your children from the annoyance and fatal effects of pin worms, by giving

DR. JOHN F. TRUE'S

Pin Worm Elixir

A GREAT DISCOVERY!

It is claimed to be the safest, most potent and most effectual remedy known for this child killing disease. As a cathartic vermifuge it has no equal. It expels all kinds of worms, and in fact all living organisms that infest the bowels of suffering humanity, are triumphantly expelled by this truly wonderful remedy. Testimony in its favor comes in from all sections where it is known. It not only effectually removes from the system those troublesome and disagreeable worms but children who have been weak and puny for years, are at once improved and restored to health by its use. Being a mild and gentle laxative, it is a corrective of the greatest value. It is purely vegetable and cannot do harm. It has also proved several hazards. Use eight inches in length. In spotted, belonging to the water species, and looks like a veritable young alligator. Fits caused by worms and indigestion.

FEARFUL DISASTER.

A Camden Schooner Crashes Into a Steamer at Night.

Eighty-one People Lose Their Lives by Drowning.

Without a Moment's Warning the Fatal Crash Came.

Only Twelve Persons from the Steamer Are Saved.

Cornelius Hargraves and Vizcaya were the Vessels.

NEW YORK, Oct 30. The steamer Humboldt, which arrived to-day from Brazil, reports that the Spanish steamer Vizcaya, which sailed from here yesterday afternoon, was run into when off Barnegat by an unknown schooner, and the captain and 61 passengers were lost. Both vessels sank. The fate of the captain and crew of the schooner is unknown. The chief officer, second officer, surgeon and engineer and eight of the crew of the steamer were picked up.

Another Account

The steamer Vizcaya, New York for Havana, was run into by a large schooner last evening, about six miles off Barnegat, on the Jersey coast Within seven minutes after the accident both vessels sank, carrying down at least 81 of their passengers and crew. The night was clear, the moon shining bright, and the sea smooth, yet none of the twelve survivors of the Vizcaya's crew who reached this city this morning could give the name of the schooner which caused the disaster, or tell how the accident happened.

The First News

of the disaster reached this city by the steamer Humboldt from Brazil which arrived, having on board the survivors of the catastrophe she had picked up at day break this morning Capt. Black of the Humboldt, said that while off Barnegat light, suddenly he heard a cry for help. Through the mist, the officers say three masts were sticking out of the water and people clinging to the yards and rigging. A boat was lowered, and they rescued twelve sailors, who all belonged to the steamship Vizcaya. Among them were the first officer, second officer, the engineer and surgeon The men were chilled to the bone from exposure to the wind and wave, and could have held but

But Little Longer

On reaching this city they were taken to the office of J. M. Ceballos & Co., 90 Wall street, the owners of the Vizcaya None of the survivors talk English and for some time it was impossible to obtain from any of them a correct account of the wreck. It was ascertained that all the passengers of the Vizcaya were lost.

Their names are Senor Juan Pedro, partner of the firm of J. M. Ceballos & Co, of this city, one of the owners of the lost steamship, M A. Calvo, wife and son, M Purr and two children; A. Ruiz, Jose Acainia, Ramon Alvarez, Juan Iledmar, Oscar Islam, Luige Peltier and Jose M Garcia

Twelve of the crew of 77 were saved from the steamship The

of the schooner is unknown. Dr Rico, of the survivors, gives this account of the disaster

"The weather was fine, the moon shone brightly and the sea was smooth. About 8, when I was on deck, I did not see any vessel near us. The ship was in charge of the first officer I went down to the saloon, where I met Mrs Calvo We began talking, when suddenly I heard the gong in the engine room ring the signal to stop. "Before I could even wonder what it was for there came an awful shock a crashing scraping sound on deck over our heads The steamer rolled well over to the port side Everybody in the saloon was thrown down.

All was Excitement, men, women and children shouting for help Mrs Calvo begged me to find and save her boy, I started up to the deck to find him When I got out of the companion way, the bridge, deck house and fore rigging were all torn away and there was a great gash in the starboard side just abaft the coal bunkers and through it is opening the water was pouring in. Close by on the starboard beam was a big four masted schooner with her bowsprit and fore rigging gone and bows stove in.

"She, too, was filling rapidly.

"Men were running all over our decks shouting

All Kinds of Orders

The crew of the schooner was doing the same thing on their vessel. The next thing I knew, the steamer was fast sinking. Several of the crew and myself scrambled up the port fore rigging Down, down, went the steamer, and up we climbed We reached the fore-gallant yard and just then the hull reached bottom This left us just out of water and the very large swell would wet our legs Twelve of us were on the yard. Some of our crew tried to reach the schooner, but she sank almost as quickly as had the Vizcaya, and as far as we could see, not a soul but ourselves was in sight, One of the men on the yards said that while he had seen a boat lowered from the schooner and seven men get in and row away We looked all around but could not see anything In the hope of attracting the attention of a passing vessel or some one on shore we cut the tarred rope on the yard into pieces a foot or two long, and lighting them waved them in the air as long as they lasted. No one came to our aid All through the night we clung to the yard, growing colder and stiffer each hour. Toward day break a cold fog settled and made matters worse. We and one of the men on the yard said he thought he heard a steamer passing as loud as our numb condition would permit. The boat made its appearance and we were taken on board the Humboldt. We could not have held out much longer."

The second officer was on deck standing under the bridge when the collision occurred. He said the steamer's lights were burning all right and the watch on deck at their posts. He did not see the schooner until the first officer on the bridge rung the signal to stop "At the time he rung to stop," said the Second Officer Covell, "Capt. Cuvill, who had not come from supper, was going upon the bridge. Before he had time to move the schooner struck.

Her Bowsprit Struck

and as far as I could see, instantly killed Capt. Cavill. Our headway carried us along. The bowsprit knocked down the bridge house and rigging. I was covered by the debris and badly cut in the face and side of the neck. I got out of the triangle about the time the water commenced to run over the deck and took to the rigging with others. We stayed there from nine in the evening until five the next morning and were completely exhausted when taken off by the crew of the Humboldt.

Late in the evening one of the shipwrecked men soon, said that at the time of the collision nearly all the Vizcaya's crew were asleep

with the hard work attendant upon leaving port and only those on duty were up He said before the lashings of the boats could be taken off preparatory to lowering them the Vizcaya's deck was under water He saw several persons in the water clinging to the floating debris and spars

At the office of the company but little information could be obtained. No interviews could be had with the survivors as those obtained were ... office. It was stated that Senor Calvo who and son was a partner in the house of Franck & Co., Havana, the biggest sugar house in Cuba. He was on his way home with his family.

The Vizcaya had ... and this was her first trip ...

alted. She was of iron and formerly plied between New York and Mediterranean ports. She was 1,000 tons register, 267 feet long, and had accommodations for fifty passengers. She was barkentine rigged. The cargo was a general one, comprising lumber, provisions, hardware, furniture and machinery. The whole cargo was valued at $150,000. The vessel was insured. It is expected that some of the bodies will be washed ashore at Barnegat.

A Camden Vessel Did It.

LEWES, Del., Oct. 31. The tug Hercules, which arrived this evening, reports that the schooner Cornelius Hargraves and the Spanish steamer Vizcaya collided at seven o'clock on the evening of the 30th fifteen miles off Barnegat. Both vessels sank in fifteen fathoms of water. Ten men from the Hargraves and seven from the Vizcaya were picked up by the schooner Sarah L. Davis and transferred to the Hercules. The latter proceeded for to render assistance at midnight and met the tug Rattler, which had been to the scene and found and all hands gone. They picked up the body of a woman, supposed to be the steamer's stewardess. The survivors report nearly a hundred people clinging to the wreck at one time. The survivors landed at Lewes life station.

Both Vessels Sunk

The schooner Cornelius Hargraves, Capt. Allen, cleared from Philadelphia Oct. 27, with a cargo of coal for Fall River, Mass. She is owned by her captain, J. F. Allen, of Fall River, Mass, and was built in Camden, Me, in 1883 She is 1332 tons burthen, 211 feet long, 43 feet broad, 21 feet depth.

Patrolled the Beach

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 31. A special to the Times from Beach Haven, N. J, says The crew of the life saving station patrolled the beach all day, but neither wreckage nor bodies came ashore The wrecks lie off shore in about 40 feet of water and directly in the track of ocean steamer and coasters

Not the First Disaster.

NEW YORK, Oct 31. Capt. Cuvill, who commanded the Vizcaya, was a native Minorca He is 50 years old and has been in the employ of the company twenty years. He leaves a wife Juan Pedro was a Spanish partner in the Spanish Trans Atlantic line He is worth several million dollars Mrs Calvo, after the collision came on deck bearing in her arms her baby boy The chief engineer tried to assist her to the mast, but the rush of waters as the ship went down tore her from his grasp. She sank, clasping her baby This is not the first time the Vizcaya has met disaster About three years ago one of her boilers burst and killed nearly the whole of the night watch. After this accident the vessel was refitted

Later advices say that only one or two of the schooner's crew were killed.

ESCAPED FROM SIBERIA.

Young Russian Free After Eighteen Years of Exile.

His Comrades Much Encouraged by American Sympathy.

LONDON, Oct 31 A young Russian named Kolchosky who succeeded in escaping from Siberia after having served 18 years there, has arrived in this city. He was arrested in Vilna when only 15 years of age on suspicion of having in his possession revolutionary documents and being concerned in a conspiracy against the government He is unwilling, as yet, to publish an account of his life in exile and his escape for fear that by doing so he will endanger his comrades still in Siberia.

He says the exiles are greatly encouraged by the expressions of sympathy of the American people with them and claims the Russian government is much distressed thereby Two exiles were condemned to solitary confinement pending an official investigation, for having in their possession clippings of American newspapers relating to maltreatment of political prisoners in Siberia

LABOR TROUBLES.

The Conference Adjourned

LYNN, Mass., Oct 31. The expected conference between the State board of arbitration and the morocco manufacturers with a view to a settlement of the strike and lockout of the morocco workers was not held to-day. It was desired to have the conference private, but representatives of the Knights of Labor and several reporters refused to leave the hall, whereupon the meeting was indefinitely postponed.

LORD CHURCHILL.

Gossip Concerning His Actions.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31. A London special says arrangements have been perfected by which Lord Randolph Churchill will once more give his services to the Conservative party. It is probable an early appeal will be taken to the country and in event of a government returns Churchill, will be offered the leadership of the opposition in the House of Commons. Should the Salisbury government be returned he will be given a seat in the Cabinet and the leadership of the House of Commons.

Broker Robinson's Forgeries

BROCKTON, Oct. 31. The Brockton National Bank, which holds upward of $5,000 of C W Robinson's paper, part of which is alleged to be forged to-day, has caused attachments to be placed on the bank accounts of Sewall P. Howard and Emerson Goldthwaite, of this city, and Everett Robinson, of Middleboro

This indicates that the note of $6,000 purporting to be made by Everett Robinson and endorsed by Howard & Goldthwaite is not a forgery This attachment is simply a forerunner of a suit. This is the only note held by the bank but became due

Statics show that more people die of consumption than from any other cause. Slight colds are the true seeds of consumption. Beware of the slightest cough Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam stands without a peer. d&wlw oc31

HE YELLED KEMP'S BALSAM.

I yell "Take Kemp's Balsam, the best cough cure." I always do when I hear a man cough, and I can't help it. It saved me and it will cure you. I was the cursed with pneumonia last winter and it broke ... up, it helps the children out when their throats are sore, cures their coughs, and tastes so good. The first dose helps you. So writes A. R. Arnold, engineer on the West Shore Ry., at Canajoharie, N. Y. d&wtf of cases of scrofula and other blood diseases are hereditary, and therefore difficult to cure. But we wish to state in the most positive emphatic manner that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula in every form. The most severe cases, too terrible for description, have yielded to this medicine when all others failed. If you suffer from impure blood in any way, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

HOLD IT TO THE LIGHT.

The man who tells you confidentially just what will cure your cold is prescribing Kemp's Balsam this year. In the preparation of this remarkable medicine for coughs and colds no expense is spared to combine only the best and purest ingredients. Hold a bottle of Kemp's Balsam to the light, and look through it; notice the bright, clear look; then compare with other remedies. Price 50c. and $1. Sample bottle free.

LOCAL MATTERS.

"Shall women become law makers in the Methodist Episcopal Church?" The vote on the above radical and important question is to be taken in the vestry of the First M. E. church on Tuesday evening at 8 30 All members of the church over 21 years of age have the right to vote, both male and female. We trust a large attendance and a heavy vote may mark this auspicious occasion. All are requested to go prepared to vote right.

The stockholders of the Orono Paper Company and other gentlemen who reside in this city made a trip to Orono yesterday to view the progress of the construction of the mill. They started at 1 30 A M and went to Basin Mills, where dinner was served at James Walker & Co's boarding house The members of the party inspected the building and were much interested in what they saw They returned early in the afternoon

A many times asked question was answered yesterday, when the signs were placed on the street cars, to indicate the termini for which they were bound. As it was before, the only sign was one bearing "Ohio street" on the end of the car, and when the car was bound toward Brewer it was impossible for a stranger, or one not in the habit of using the cars, to tell which one to take. The new signs are in large letters and can be easily read. They will be greatly appreciated by the patrons of the road

There is a fair number of vessels in this port at the present time, there having been several arrivals each day for the past few days, and business looks a little more brisk than it did the first of the week. There is quite a number of loaded vessels on the way to this port, and they will come at intervals The recent storm has has delayed them, they having been obliged to seek ports of shelter. Several vessels are now in port waiting to get a berth in Kenduskeag stream where they will discharge their cargoes of grain. Quite a number of coasters are now being loaded with lumber in this port, and a few vessels are taking ice.

Mr. R. J. Cushing, who was formerly located at No 9 Kenduskeag bridge, will open his new jewelry establishment at No. 38 Main street to-day The store has been very handsomely fitted up in mahogany, fine woods and plate glass, and is one of the best appearing establishments to be found anywhere. Mr. Cushing has recently been to New York, where he obtained his extensive stock on a cash basis at rates which enable him to offer some fine bargains, and it has been arranged in a most attractive manner. Mr. Cushing has many friends in the city who will doubtless call upon him to-day and hereafter and extend to him their patronage.

The annual meeting of the council of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the Maine State College was held yesterday at Orono, and the following members were present: W. E. Strickland, of this city, E. Aldea, of Winthrop, and A. S. Moore, of Waterville of the Board of State College Trustees; D. H. Knowlton, of Farmington, of the Horticultural Society Mr. Winslow, of the State Grange; E. Walker McKeen, of Fryeburg, of the Board of Agriculture; President Fernald, Dr. Russell, Profs. Jordan, Harvey and Jackson. The forenoon was devoted to arranging station work for the coming winter. The officers ... M. C. Fernald, President, and W. H. Jordan, Secretary.

The members of Excelsior Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, gave a very pleasant event last evening at Odd Fellows Hall, it being the supper and dance previously referred to There was a large attendance of the members of the order and of the lodges of Odd Fellows, and the occasion was a success in every way. Supper was served from 5.30 to 8 o'clock, and the delicacies were fully appreciated by those who partook of them. Dancing began soon after 8 and was continued several hours many of those present taking part in the amusement. Music was furnished by Rowe's Orchestra. The dancing was very much enjoyed

HARVEST SUPPER AND ENTERTAINMENT. The annual harvest supper and entertainment of B. H. Beale Relief Corps was given last evening at G. A R. hall, and there was a large attendance. After the refreshments had been served the following entertainment was given, the participants acquitting themselves very creditably Duet, Miss Kerr and Mr. Carver, harmonica solo, Mr Young, duet, the Misses Hatch duet, tambourine and bones, Mr. and Mrs. Seavey, recitation, Mrs Edith Patterson, song, with banjo accompaniment, Mr Young, recitation, Mr. Thomas Mee, song, Mr. Hatch, recitation, Miss Perkins After the musical and literary programme there was dancing which was participated in by many of those present The auction of vegetables disposed of many good bargains. The event was enjoyable to all in attendance

THE OPENING CHAMPIONSHIP GAME The first game in the New England Foot Ball League will be played to-day at Hanover, N H, between the Dartmouth and Bowdoin teams. The teams seem to be about evenly matched as far as the scores made against them by Harvard indicate and it is expected that neither team will have a walkover. The Dartmouth, Amherst, Williams and Institute of Technology teams, the other members of the league, have had the advantage of much more practice than the Bowdoin eleven, they having played a number of games with other teams, but it is hoped that the good material in the team may help to overcome this advantage Since the Harvard game the Bowdoin team has been practising faithfully, and is expected to give a good account of itself in the championship games Judging from appearances so far the Amherst team will stand pretty near the head of the league at the close of the league games, as the eleven was beaten only 10—0 by Yale Saturday Several of the games will be played in Portland on the base ball grounds

AMUSEMENTS

The Two-Headed Nightingale

Another entertainment was given at the Opera House last evening by Miss Millie Christine, the two-headed Nightingale, and her company to a fair sized audience which was interested by the programme

This afternoon there will be a full programme for the entertainment and the engagement will be concluded this evening.

The Japanese Village

There was a large attendance at the Japanese Village in Norombega Hall last evening, and those who were present were much interested in what they saw and heard The engagement will be continued this afternoon and evening, and many will doubtless attend

Robbery at Orland

It was discovered yesterday morning that the drug store of Mr A J Jordan and the post-office at Orland had been entered by thieves sometime during the night, but who the robbers are is not known The thieves obtained entrance into Mr Jordan's store by breaking a glass in the store door They scattered the contents of the store about in a careless manner in their search for valuables but succeeded in finding nothing very costly, as they only took some tobacco and cigars The post-office was entered in a similar manner and the mail was overhauled by the thieves, who did their best to find something valuable Postmaster Ames, upon looking over the mail after discovering the attempt at theft in the morning, thought the robbers had obtained very little if anything The robbers did not get enough to repay them for their labor. There have been but few robberies in this part of the State for some time, but people should be on their guard as the gang which operated in the country towns a few months ago may be on the rampage again

Series of Religious Meetings

REV. E. A Whittier, the well known evangelist, whose labors have extended throughout the country, will come to this city in about a week, to assist at the Columbia street Baptist church for a time During the twenty one years in which he has labored he has held two hundred series of meetings, largely in New England Last year he was engaged on the Pacific coast, in Oregon, Washington and British Columbia. Among the places in Maine where he has labored are South Berwick, Kennebunkport, Saco, Springvale, Gorham Biddeford, Bath, Damariscotta, and he has been very successful. At Gorham, ex-Governor Robie and the leading citizens gave their influence to the meetings He has held meetings in more than fifty cities and towns in this State. At the Gorham meetings, in eleven days one hundred and twenty-five professed faith in Christ. He was preceded by earnest labors by the pastor and the people of the Congregational church, the leading church in the town. In Yarmouth over two hundred united with the three churches engaged in the series.

A BURNI G SO E LEG

Ulcers Form. Hospitals and Doctors Useless. Crazed with Pain. Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

About eight years ago I wrote you from Wilkesbarre, Pa., describing how your wonderful remedies completely cured me of a terrible case of eczema of salt rheum. I must now tell you what Cuticura Remedies have again done for me. On the 2nd of last September, I had the misfortune to bruise my leg, and I put a piece of sticking plaster on it. Inside of a week I had a terrible leg. My wife became frightened and advised me to go to a surgeon. I went, and doctored for two months, but no good was done me, besides costing me big money. My leg had by this time formed into an ulcer and got worse every day. I could not stand it any longer, and made up my mind to go to a hospital and see if I could be helped. I went to several here in the city, in turn, but none could do me any good. I had a terrible leg, with a hole in it as big as a dollar, and pain that almost set me crazy. I got scared about it, and determined to try Cuticura Remedies. I obtained a set, and inside of five weeks my leg was healed up as well as it ever was, except the scar which is left for a reminder of what was once a terrible sore leg. These Remedies are worth their weight in gold.

"A RACE WITH DEATH!"

Among the nameless heroes, none are more worthy of martyrdom than he who rode down the valley of the Conemaugh, warning the people ahead of the Johnstown flood. Mounted on a powerful horse, faster and faster went the rider, but the flood was swiftly gaining, until it caught the unlucky horseman and swept on, grinding, crushing, annihilating both weak and strong.

In the same way is disease lurking near, like unto the sword of Damocles, ready to fall, without warning, on its victim, who allows his system to become clogged up, and his blood poisoned, and thereby his health endangered. To eradicate these poisons from the system, no matter what their name or nature, and save yourself a spell of malarial, typhoid or bilious fever, or eruptions, swellings, tumors and kindred disfigurements, keep the liver and kidneys healthy and vigorous, by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It's the only blood-purifier sold on trial. Your money is returned if it doesn't do exactly as recommended. A concentrated vegetable extract. Sold by druggists, in large bottles, at $1.00.

WINANS' HUNTING GROUNDS.

Afoot in Scotland—The Enormous Expenditure for Shooting and Fishing.

[Special Correspondence Whig & Courier.]

[COPYRIGHT—1890.]

Tomich, Scotland, Sept. 20, 1890.

On coming face to face with the fact of the depopulation of rural Scotland and especially of the northern and western Highlands, it is astounding that any system of land laws is permitted to exist which will work such fatal results to a country. There must be a practical reason for all this, you feel. You dig and delve for that reason, and you are still more astounded. Inquire where you may there is in effect but one answer: "Highlanders are not worth to the great landlords so many red deer. Crofters are of less account than partridges and rabbits. Human beings in the form of Scottish peasantry are less valuable than their weight in pheasants or fish."

Not satisfied with assertions and generalities, you delve and dig again. It is easy enough to find proof of depopulation. But it is difficult for the average American to realize how land proprietors can find adequate compensation for the loss of population and its labor which ordinarily alone give to land the greatest value possible for it to possess. Agents and factors everywhere tell you that the income from hunting and fishing privileges is more than repaying proprietors. This seems so inexplicable that you delve and dig again, as I did, and finally arrive at some most astounding facts. The great overwhelming fact is that a greater area of land in Scotland is now devoted to the exclusive purpose of game preserves than is occupied by farmers for the exclusive cultivation of the soil, and that nine-tenths of all land and of all rocks, lochs, brooks or river shores in the kingdom are annually leased in shooting and fishing privileges to British sportsmen.

Naturally Scottish peasantry are in the way of game and fish. But passing a discussion of the effect of this land policy upon the sociologic and economic condition of Scotland, we Americans have no conception whatever of the stupendous sums annually paid by British titled and for their few weeks' delights with rod and gun. The amounts received by single owners for single privileges are equally surprising. Mrs. Chisholm, owner of the Chisholm estates which border Strathglass here, must receive £14,200. I find that for sixty-nine shootings and fishings the Duke of Sutherland received rentals amounting to £23,996. As he has more than one hundred for lease, his income from this source alone must reach £35,000 or £40,000. In Forfarshire, on one estate belonging to the "Tutors of the Earl of Dalhousie" these privileges when rental prices I have been able to secure reach £10,400; and of those of the Countess Dowager of Seafield, regarding which information is available, twelve shootings and fishings in Elginshire give her £3,139; eight in Banffshire, £506; and fourteen in Inverness-shire, £4,605; or a total of £8,300; which is probably not one-third of her entire income from this source.

As I am quite certain the facts have never yet appeared in the public prints either in Great Britain or America, I have been to the pains of getting into tabulated form the actual rentals known to be annually paid for these shooting and fishing privileges in Scotland:

The total of these known rentals, £468,613, exceeds $2,310,000. There are altogether, 3,378 "shootings" and 856 "fishings." The above sum represents only the rentals paid on but quite one-fourth of the entire 4,234 shootings and fishings; so that a moderate estimate of the entire sum paid annually in rentals alone would probably not fall short of $10,000,000. This vast sum is actually annually secured, by Scottish landlords exclusive of all other rentals for grazing and agriculture which their lands secure to them. But it is by no means the principal expenditure by titled and gentlemen British sportsmen. It is of common report here that their other expenses equal or exceed this first cost of possession. An army of conveyancers are employed making and renewing leases and in modifying their terms and conditions. Nearly every has its factor or agent who mulcts the absent tenant with innumerable petty charges. Hunting-lodges with the appointments and accessories of palaces must be kept in repair, occupied and in order. Accoutrements for the chase on the moor require large original investment and constant renewal and addition. The average annual cost of the support and care of a pack of twenty-five couples of fox or deer hounds is $5,000. A host of gamekeepers are supported the year through, and, during the hunting season, an average deer forest shooting will employ, from a half-dozen huntsmen, from thirty to fifty gillies, or general utility men. These gillies are recruited from two classes, the hangers-on of hunts and stables in the large English and Scotch cities, and from later-day crofters' families; the latter causing a complete change in the character of young Highlanders. Just enough crofters are permitted to remain upon these great northern estates to assist in furnishing a supply of this class of human cattle; and the trifle of £15 or £20 per year, for a few weeks' attendance upon the sportsman lord, with the corruptions of kennel and saddle rooms at the lodges, and other idleness for the remainder of the year, are making a sad and unworthy lot of a class that in former times possessed many of the highest qualities of the sturdy Scottish race.

The item of transportation of all this [illegible] from the English and Scotch capitals, where now the greatest number of titled gentlemen [illegible] one of [illegible]

[illegible] ore-bound railways in the two kingdoms, not only among its employes large numbers of agents to solicit this portion of traffic, but during August and September they are sorely taxed to supply adequate accommodations. The expense of entertainment of a bevy of ladies and gentlemen for two months at one of these splendid shooting-lodges is very great. To illustrate: Lord Tweedmouth is proprietor of Guisachan deer forest, which stretches away from this village of Tomich to the south of weird Glen Affaric. He is proprietor and not a tenant, and a man of moderate, quiet tastes, as the British aristocracy are averaged. His regime of entertainment would represent less outlay than that of most shooting tenants. At his lodge, little less than a palace, and but a mile distant from Tomich, are annually entertained such people as Lord and Lady Aberdeen and family; the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Sarah Churchill, Lord and Lady Curzon, Lord and Lady Ramsey, Lady Winborne, the Marquis and Lady Dufferin, Lord Baring, the artist Gourley Steele and Professor Drummond, Lord Randolph Churchill, Lord and Lady Sutton, and Sir Thomas Munro, with their retinues of servants; and I am informed that his annual outlay exclusively in entertainment exceeds $40,000.

Aside from all these tasks upon the wealthy sportsman, there is a large and increasing outlay in the matter of litigation. Sportsmen tenants become

"LAND CRAZY."

All manner of devices and reckless stratagems are resorted to in order to break a neighboring sportsman's lease and increase holders' territory. This leads to the courts, and a certain class of the shrewdest lawyers in Great Britain are gaining large fortunes fostering this character of barratry. One tenant occupying shootings in the shires of Inverness and Ross is known to expend actually $30,000 in litigation alone. On the authority of those possessing absolute knowledge of the entire subject, and after a most careful investigation into the details of expenditure, I believe that an exceedingly conservative estimate would place the annual rentals of Scottish shootings and fishings at $10,000,000, and the expense of enjoying their privileges at an equal or greater sum. So that for hunting and fishing in Scotland alone, British sportsmen annually expend the enormous sum of $20,000,000!

These Scottish shootings and fishings comprise almost inconceivably vast tracts as well as ridiculously insignificant bounds. Among the shootings, areas of from five to 250,000 acres are found; while the heart of the London clerk thrills with exultation eleven months in the year as he glowing boasts of the "fishing in Scotland" which may comprise no more than six rods of the shore of some gentle rivulet in which he could not drown unless held therein face downward. Many of the Duke of Sutherland's "fishings" are let in ol vast spaces or lengths of no more than six rods each. Some of the larger deer forests of Scotland may be mentioned. Cairnichbuh, in Argyleshire, extends over 35,000 acres. In Aberdeen, the forest of Mar is fifteen miles long and eight wide. Glengarry Forest in Inverness-shire is about seven miles long; Gaik comprises nearly 11,000 acres; and Glenavon contains 22,000 acres. In Sutherlandshire the Dirre-Chatt forest is fifty miles long and twenty wide, while Dirrie-Moss forest is more than half as large. The great Glenartney forest, in Perthshire, made famous by the genius of Scott, is said to contain about 1,500 red deer. The glory of Scotland to the sportsman, however, is the magnificent forest of Athol, Blair-Athol, which now contains nearly 8,000 deer at large. As it is solely occupied by its proprietor, the Duke of Athol, who is a strict preserver of the breed, it is the acme of social and hunting ambition to be once admitted to the chase in these noble grounds. The English sportsman who has killed one Athol deer, is almost as great as a nobleman in Great Britain. But the in Scotland, if not the largest in the world outside of Russia, is tenanted by a gentleman claiming American citizenship; one who secured countless millions in profit out of railway building and other transactions in Russia. This gentleman is Mr. William L. Winans, formerly, or at present, of Baltimore and it is violating no confidence in Scotland to state that his lordly absorption of shootings and deer forests, as well as his tendencies to litigation in connection with the same on a tremendous scale, have awakened feelings other than those of admiration among the titled sportsmen of Britain. He has not been enjoying the sport of this sort of acquisition ten years, but his energy, money and lawyers have already given him a red deer park nearly one-half as large as the total area of Rhode Island. He is now tenant of more than twenty great sporting estates, most of which are among the vast properties of the Chisholms of Erchless Castle.

Affaric forest, covering almost the whole of Glen Affaric, contains nearly 15,000 acres, and the rental is £500. Corriechallie, with Glengowrie in Ross-shire, has 9,000 acres. Carrynachoolsad, south- er Chisholm shooting, costs £160. Craskie Forest in Inverness-shire, comprises 9,000 acres, and Mr. Winans pays £1,250 for this. Over in Ross-shire, adjoining his Inverness forests is the small forest of Durnadaun, rented from Sir K. S. Matheson, Bart, for but £300. It covers nearly 10,000 acres; and he pays £350 for Glenach, with 8,000 acres, from the same proprietor. The Farnakyle Forest, in which 20 or 30 stags and 250 brace of grouse may be annually shot, which also covers some of the most magnificent scenery of Grand Strathglass, is secured for £970. Its area is 15,000 acres. The south side of Glasslet- ter, also Chisholm property, a "shot over" by Mr. Winans for $950.

Splendid scenery has been secured throughout with these immense shooting estates. Glencannich, opening to the northwest from Strathglass, is covered by a succession of weird tarns, and the mountain acclivities rise in unbroken and beautiful slopes. The Chisholms receive from Mr. Winans for Glencannich $1,250. Beyond this to the west and south are the vast forests of Glenstrathfarar and Culligan Deer Forest, in Inverness-shire, the property of Lord Lovat. They occupy areas of 53,000 acres, and the rent is $5,700. Glenstrathfarar opens north from Strathglass at the little hamlet of Struy, and running for ten miles along the base of the mountain Beallachard forms one of the most exquisitely beautiful valleys of the Highlands. Affaric Forest, in Glen Affaric, previously mentioned, is a massive [illegible] overshadowed by the [illegible] of the giant mountain, Mam Sul, from whose peak the German Ocean, and the Atlantic are visible. Further still to [illegible] Sir K. J. Mackenzie's deer forests [illegible] Coulin and Corryvaick, in Ross-shire, [illegible] Mr. Winans pays [illegible]

EDGAR L. WAKEMAN.

[illegible] of Knockan, he pays [illegible]; besides these, Mr. Winans has secured the Chisholm forests of Ballindalloch, which cover 9,000; the forests of Bleabore, Patt, and Corryrach, on Ross-shire, with an area of 16,000 acres, at a rental of £1,000; Glengraph, another Chisholm forest, costing £140; and quite a number of smaller forests and divisions of forests at an added outlay of about £3,000. These form from near the city of Beauly on the east coast, across the entire width of Scotland through the vast wilderness of Inverness and Ross shires. They cover four rivers, many majestic mountains, several exquisite lochs, and four of the grandest glens and straths in Scotland. Their rentals are at least $18,000. Certainly $10,000 is a moderate estimate of the annual legitimate expenses in the care of a "shooting" of a quarter million acres in area. And it is a matter of common report in the Highlands that "the amateur American millionaire sportsman" expends yearly £10,000 more in litigation. It is calculated that his annual outlay for the pleasure of being the tenant proprietor of the largest deer-forest in Scotland is fully £40,000, or nearly $200,000. His accoutrements, entertainment and retainers are such as to awaken most unpleasant emotions in the breasts of titled sportsmen; and when he rides to the hounds he is attended by more than 100 huntsmen and gillies. But "the great American deer stalker" has whimsical notions of sporting. He seems to enjoy possession rather than use. For five years there has not been heard the crack of rifle within his forests. His red deer are as tame as sheep, and his hounds voiceless, save in their kennel howlings, and when as their keepers give them galloping "poundings" along the mountain roads, their yelps of restless longing and disquiet awaken strange echoes among the straths and crags.

Statics show that more people die of consumption than from any other cause. Slight colds are the true seeds of consumption. Beware of the slight cough. Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam cures without a peer.

HE YELLED KEMP'S BALSAM.

I yell "Take Kemp's Balsam, the best cough cure." I always do when I hear a man cough, and I can't help it. It saved me and it will cure you. I was threatened with pneumonia last winter and it broke it up. It helps the children out when their throats are sore, cures their coughs and tastes so good. The first dose does it. So writes A. R. CHAPTER V.
USELESS EUSTACE.

"You have arrived just in time to stand up for yourself."

Lady Belvoir, like the generality of perfectly selfish people, was good natured. So long as she got what she wanted she was very willing that others also should get what they wanted. Indeed, she much preferred their doing so, because it is pleasanter to associate with contented than with discontented mortals. As for Percy Thorold, he was, perhaps, of all her captives the one of whom she was the least proud and whose allegiance she was the least anxious to retain. For one thing, he had wearied her to death; for another, she was quite well aware that he had been in love, not with her but with a girl of her name who had long since ceased to exist; finally, he had never for a moment succeeded in touching her heart.

Consequently her feeling toward him was one of simple friendliness, and as she knew him to be an excellent man in all respects (except those which she cared for) she was honestly pleased to discover that he was smitten with the only girl in the world whom she ever found tolerable as a companion. She found various means of bringing them together, and amused herself when she had nothing better to do by watching the progress of their mutual relations. They were obviously falling in love with one another, but were just as obviously unconscious of it, so that their satisfaction in meetings which they had never arranged and their ill concealed disappointment when, as sometimes happened, those meetings failed to come off, formed a pretty and refreshing little idyl for a disenchanted woman of the world to contemplate at spare moments.

Lady Belvoir's spare moments, to be sure, were not numerous, for she had many irons in the fire and these naturally required pretty constant attention. Still, she was not so self engrossed but that she could occasionally devote a little time to the interests of an old and valued friend, and it is certain that at this period Percy Thorold's opinion of her underwent a marked change for the better. As the spring and summer went on, and as his engagement to and rupture with his cousin passed into the category of ancient history, he became a more and more frequent visitor in Carlton House terrace. He was still by way of shunning the gay world, but perhaps his reasons for so doing were no longer the same as they had been earlier in the year. It is only quite young and quite old men who go into society for society's sake—the others submit to it in order to meet somebody; and if that individual can be met just as easily and far more comfortably at afternoon tea why should a busy politician neglect public affairs for the chance of a few hurried words in a crowded ball room?

But, of course, busy politicians cannot always count upon being free between 5 and 6 o'clock, and that is why Percy was unable to put in an appearance at Lady Belvoir's one afternoon, although he had previously given Miss Leslie to understand that he would be there.

"My dear girl," Lady Belvoir said, when her friend entered, "I am delighted to see you, but I'm afraid you won't see anybody except me today. I did ask Percy to look in, but I have just had a note from him to say that he is bound to be at Westminster."

"But really I don't want to see anybody except you," Dorothy replied, with pardonable mendacity.

"Oh, well, if you are sure of that"—Lady Belvoir paused for a moment and laughed—"if you are sure of that," she resumed presently, "I'll ring and order tea. All things considered, I don't know that I particularly care about seeing anybody except you so I won't send you away."

These two women, who had so little in common, had by this time at any rate a considerable number of common acquaintances, and upon these their conversation not unnaturally turned. Thus justice, without very much mercy, was done to many persons who, by reason of the narrowness of the present stage, have not been introduced to the reader, as well as to one or two who have. Mr. Schneider, for example, if he had been concealed behind one of the numerous screens which adorned the room, would have been forced to listen to certain truths about himself which could hardly have failed to make him unhappy, although he might have been to some extent consoled by hearing Lady Belvoir take his part.

"I don't know why you are always so hard upon my poor little Schneider," she said. "He isn't clever, of course; but one can't expect everybody to be clever."

"No—only I don't think he is a gentleman," Dorothy replied.

"Has any one ever had the effrontery to assert that he was? What do you mean by a gentleman? I mean a person entitled to use coat armor, and I don't see what all the other elaborate definitions that one hears have to do with the subject. Schneider has just about as many ancestors, I suppose—a few more or a few less—as half the [illegible]"

"Very likely; but I was thinking of his manners rather than of his birth, and as for half the men whom you speak of, I never can understand why you [illegible] them."

The truth was that Dorothy could not enter into the good humored disdain with which Lady Belvoir regarded her [illegible]

[illegible] titled to the use of coat armor, but that did not alter the fact that he was lazy, selfish and inefficient.

Now, if Dorothy disliked this young gentleman—as she did very cordially—he had no great fancy or admiration for her; and, although he did not go so far as to make a face at her, he allowed it to be plainly seen that he was both surprised and displeased to find her in the room. What business had he to be either the one or the other? That was what Dorothy wondered and what Lady Belvoir could have told her.

But Lady Belvoir only laughed a little, as though tickled by some thought of her own, and said to the new comer:

"You have arrived just in time to stand up for yourself. Miss Leslie has been telling me that she can't understand why I admit half the men who come here. Does that include you, do you suppose, or do you belong to the other half?"

Moreton had the manners of the modern young man, which, with all due respect to the modern young man, is tantamount to saying that his manners might have been more refined and urbane without any detriment to his general attractiveness. He sank into a low chair, felt for the mustache which had recently been sacrificed, and allowed some seconds to elapse before he answered:

"I don't know, I'm sure; but I should have thought Miss Leslie might as well have condemned the whole of us while she was at it. It's very evident that we haven't had the good luck to please her. But perhaps that is because we haven't tried as hard as we ought to have done."

At this Lady Belvoir laughed again. "Suppose you begin now?" she suggested. "I shall be happy to retire to the other end of the room if you think you would get on better without me."

"I don't think we should get on at all better without you," answered Dorothy and Moreton in one breath.

It was a pity that after so emphatic a concurrence of opinion they should have been forced to do without her; but at this moment two other visitors made their appearance, and so it came to pass that Dorothy and Mr Moreton being left sitting side by side, had to entertain one another whether they liked it or not. Neither of them liked it at all, and Dorothy did not even make an effort to do her duty, so that it devolved upon her neighbor to open the proceedings. This he did by observing in a somewhat aggrieved tone:

"I didn't know that Lady Belvoir had a tea fight on this afternoon."

"I don't think she expected anybody to come," answered Dorothy coldly. "Not even you, perhaps."

"H'm! If it isn't an impertinent question, may I ask whether she expected you?"

Impertinent or not, he obtained no answer to it, but presently Dorothy observed, "I wonder at your not liking tea parties."

"Do I," inquired Moreton, more in sorrow than in anger, "look like a man who enjoys tea parties?"

"Yes, I think so," replied the girl imperturbably. "Besides, if you don't enjoy tea parties, what do you enjoy?"

Moreton very seldom lost his temper, but then it was not often that he was tried in this way. He was now thoroughly angry, and if Dorothy had been a man she would doubtless have been requested in a peremptory manner to explain her words. As it was, he only remarked, with studied calmness:

"I suppose that means that you look upon me as an effeminate sort of a person. I am sorry for that, but I don't think I'll try to alter your opinion."

"I don't think you could," returned his implacable antagonist.

The young man stared at her in undisguised astonishment.

"I know you don't like me, Miss Leslie," said he, "and if you'll excuse my speaking the truth I don't very much care. But as a simple matter of curiosity may I ask you what your quarrel with me is?"

"Yes," she replied, "you may, and I will tell you. My quarrel with you is that you are good for nothing. I may be wrong, but it always seems to me that a good-for-nothing man is ten times worse than a good-for-nothing woman. It is sufficient for a woman to be something—pretty, for instance—but a man ought to be able to do something. If he can't he might as well never have been born."

"Oh, but I can do several things," Mr. Moreton replied composedly. "I can dance very well, and I can shoot rather better than pretty well, and—let me see, is there anything else? Oh, yes; I forgot my chief accomplishment. I am a really first rate hand at ingratiating myself with ladies. Not with you, of course, but you are the exception that proves the rule."

If he meant to be exasperating he scored a success, for Dorothy jerked up her shoulders without deigning to respond, and after that he could get no more out of her. That she had not revealed the true cause of her hostility to him he could hardly be expected to divine. How could he know that she suspected him of an ambition to acquire Lady Belvoir's fortune, and that she was convinced that Lady Belvoir, minus her fortune, would have had no sort of fascination for him?

As little could she guess what was in reality the sad plight of this hardened student of feminine nature. For Eustace Moreton Lady Belvoir's reputation had no secrets. He knew all that was said about her and believed most of it. Yet it was now nearly a month since he had become as wax in Lady Belvoir's hands. That all powerful woman had turned her attention to him the moment that she discovered how lightly he valued it, and such feeble resistance as he had offered had been overcome with ridiculous ease. It may be conceded that Eustace Moreton was a selfish man; but it is certain that the persistency with which he had followed Lady Belvoir about of late was not due to any wish on his part to make what is usually called a good marriage. He called himself an ass for acting as he did, and he knew that he was an ass; but he did it all the same.

Dorothy, for the reasons which have already been mentioned, determined to sit him out upon this occasion, and it need scarcely be added that she attained her purpose. He stayed until the other people had gone away, after which he glanced appealingly at Lady Belvoir and impatiently at Dorothy; but as neither of these chose to understand what he wanted, he resigned himself to the inevitable and took his leave.

"Poor fellow!" laughed Lady Belvoir when she and her friend were once more alone.

"He is indeed!" agreed Dorothy, with [illegible]

[illegible] that I ask of a man is that he should adore me; then I expect him to keep his temper with me; finally, I should like him, if he can manage it, to amuse me. But I don't insist upon that."

"And does Mr. Useless Mortal fulfill all these conditions?" inquired Dorothy scornfully.

"Mr Useless Mortal, as you so wittily call him—by the way, Dorothy, I wouldn't display wit if I were you; it isn't a popular quality—is all that I could wish him to be. He behaved admirably this afternoon, because I did tell him that I should be at home and alone, and of course he must have thought that I had purposely misled him. When I think of the fuss that Percy Thorold used to make when these unavoidable accidents occurred!"

"Mr Thorold was engaged to you," observed Dorothy, reddening a little, though there was no ostensible cause for her doing so.

"Yes, for a time he was, but he fussed long before he was engaged. Mr Moreton, I am sure, would never be fussy, and never try to interfere with one's arrangements. A pleasanter man to marry I can't imagine, and I really quite regret that it is impossible for me to marry him."

"I am delighted to hear you say so," Dorothy declared.

"Thanks very much. Would you prefer my marrying your friend Schneider, then?"

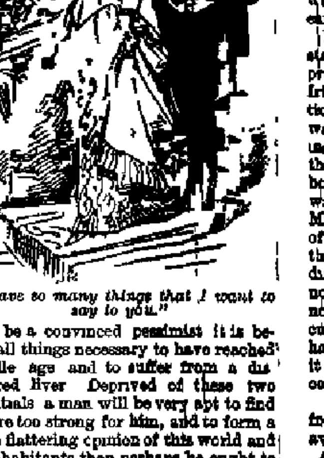

"Of the two I think I should," answered Dorothy. "Mr. Schneider, at least, is rich enough to be disinterested."

"You almost make me wish to convince you that the other is disinterested too. But perhaps it wouldn't be worth while. Taking everything into consideration I think I will leave matrimony to you, my dear. You are better fitted for domestic joys than I am, and Percy—oh, I beg your pardon; I didn't mean to say that."

"I don't know what you were going to say," declared Dorothy, with a good deal of dignity.

"Of course you don't. Well, I was only going to say that Percy also is fitted for domestic joys. Possibly he may have told you so himself by this time."

CHAPTER VI.
THREE UNFORTUNATES.

"I have so many things that I want to say to you."

To be a convinced pessimist it is before all things necessary to have reached middle age and to suffer from a disordered liver. Deprived of these two essentials a man will be very apt to find nature too strong for him, and to form a more flattering opinion of this world and its inhabitants than perhaps he ought to form. An unfortunate love affair is all very well so long as the soreness lasts, but this invariably wears off sooner or later, and then a reaction takes place in the minds of the young and healthy which cannot but prove fatal to their wisdom and philosophy.

Thus, in the course of the summer with which this narrative is concerned, it came to pass that Percy Thorold, who was still young, who did not so much as know that he possessed a liver, and whose love for his cousin had become a mere memory, began to think that there were good and even adorable women in London, notwithstanding the excellent reasons that he had for believing the contrary. At all events he thought that there was one such woman, and it is obvious that when you have gone the length of making that admission there is an end of your pessimism.

Paramount as were the claims of public affairs upon his attention, he had nevertheless found time during those summer months to see a great deal of Dorothy Leslie, and the more he had seen of her the more he had learned to appreciate her immeasurable superiority to the rest of her sex. After all, there must be a few exceptions even to the most stringent of rules; and here, surely, was one of them. He was still willing to maintain that women in general are false, fickle and foolish. Now, as regarded this bright and rare example of what all women ought to be, but unfortunately are not, there was one thing specially noticeable about her; namely, that although she might, if she had chosen to give them any encouragement, have had a very respectable number of admirers, she did not seem to care in the least for admiration.

What made her so delightful was that you could talk to her as to a reasonable being. When she spoke of art or music or politics or any other subject in which you and she were jointly interested, you might feel sure that she had no arriere pensee—that she was not merely leading you on with a view to putting you in a good humor, and so acquiring a firm basis for the opening of those siege operations which rich men soon learn to recognize and dread. It was, in short, perfectly clear that she neither expected nor wished you to make love to her.

Not that these sage and just reflections prevented Percy from making love to her—quite the contrary. There are a thousand different ways of making love, and his, if a quiet and undemonstrative one, was no whit less effectual and effective than the others. At what period of their acquaintanceship it first dawned upon him that the feelings which he entertained for Miss Leslie were not precisely those of a father he could not afterward remember, nor indeed was this a question of any importance. It was sufficient for him to know that life would no longer be endurable for him without her, and it was very pleasant to him to suspect that when he should tell her as much—which he fully intended to do before the end of the season and the session—she would not be altogether displeased. But there is no rose without a thorn, and a very annoying little thorn [illegible]

[illegible] one absurd agreement: he had pledged his word of honor, and he must do what he had undertaken to do. Still the idea of submitting Dorothy Leslie's name for approval to three such men as Guise, Moreton and Schneider was horribly distasteful to him and his inclination was to put off the bad quarter of an hour as long as possible. Of the disapproval of these gentlemen he did not feel much afraid. In the first place they would hardly, he presumed, have the impertinence to object to Miss Leslie; in the second place they were but slightly acquainted with her; thirdly and lastly he was prepared, by way of a bribe, to accord to them his full and free permission to marry any three ladies upon the face of the earth whom it might please them to select. What he did not like at all was the prospect of hearing his own selection discussed, however cursorily, and this deterred him from summoning a meeting which, in good faith, he ought to have summoned as soon as his intentions became clear to him.

It was not until the month of July that he was somewhat rudely awakened to a sense of his duty. By that time his devotion to Miss Leslie had been very generally remarked upon, and Miss Leslie's mother, for one, was beginning to think that if he meant anything he had better say so. Mrs. Leslie was not a worldly woman, and was in no great hurry to see her only daughter married but she thought that Dorothy ought to have the chances to which all girls are entitled, and it stands to reason that those chances must be diminished by the conspicuous and apparently welcome attentions of one man. She therefore took an opportunity of saying to Mr Thorold:

"I hope you won't be too busy to come and say good-by before we leave. We shall be going home in less than a week now."

It was at one of the last big official receptions of the year that this communication was made to Percy, who was a good deal disconcerted by it. Although he had of late been so constantly in Dorothy's society their meetings had for the most part taken place under the benevolent auspices of Lady Belvoir and his interviews with Mrs Leslie had been few and far between. A certain anxious look in the good lady's eyes made her meaning tolerably plain to him, and indeed he felt that her anxiety was justifiable. Well, it should soon be set at rest, but of course he must now lose no time about taking Guise and the other men into his confidence. He told Mrs. Leslie how very sorry he was to hear of her imminent departure, and promised that he would call in Ebury street in a day or two, after which he moved away in search of Lord Guise, of whose red beard he had caught a glimpse earlier in the evening.

But Lord Guise when discovered, was standing with his back against the wall, propounding original solutions of the Irish difficulty to a knot of amused politicians and it was evident that there was for the present no chance of obtaining his undivided attention. Percy therefore, passed on in quest of some body else, whose undivided attention he was fortunate enough to secure ere long. Miss Leslie, when he joined her, was one of a group of three or four persons, but these slipped away one by one immediately after his approach, and he could not help remarking that a similar phenomenon had occurred under similar circumstances more than once of late. He had no objection to its occurrence, only it certainly seemed to show that his courtship had lasted long enough.

"I have just been horrified to hear from Mrs Leslie that you are going away," he began.

"I shouldn't have thought that that was such a very horrifying piece of news," said Dorothy laughing. "Most people do leave London in July, don't they?"

"Yes, unless they have the bad luck to be members of parliament. But I didn't realize somehow that the end was so near. Shall you be sorry to go?"

"I shall be sorry for some things," answered the girl. "It has been very pleasant, and people have been very kind to me. Oh, yes I shall be sorry."

"I wonder whether you will be half as sorry as I shall be!"

To this it was obviously impossible that Dorothy should make any reply, for how could she gauge the depth of Mr Thorold's probable sorrow? Consequently she held her peace, and he went on to tell her how dreadfully he would miss her, how empty London would seem after her departure, how he would hate the remainder of the long weary session, and a good deal more to the like effect. Perhaps her silence led him on to say rather more than he ought to have said without going farther still, but as it seems likely that the majority of those who will read these pages have been in love once in their lives some clemency will doubtless be displayed in their judgment of him. He could not propose to her there and then by reason of that ridiculous pledge but in a few days at the outside he would be free to declare himself, and he was naturally eager in the meantime to find out, if he could, what answer he would receive to his declaration.

It cannot be said that a quarter of an hour of investigation brought him to the point of actual certainty, yet at the expiration of that interval he was in high spirits, and since he took away with him one of the flowers which Dorothy had been wearing in the front of her dress, it may be assumed that he had no reason to despond. Before wishing her good night he had ascertained that she would be at home on the following Wednesday, and that she did not expect any other visitors on that afternoon.

Meanwhile, he was not the only person who, at the same time and place, had reluctantly determined to convene an early meeting of the Anti Matrimonial league. Lady Belvoir, magnificent in emeralds and diamonds, was present at this reception, and Lady Belvoir, like Mrs. Leslie and other less notable personages, was about to withdraw the light of her countenance from London. She said so to many of those with whom she conversed, and among others to Eustace Moreton, who of late had dogged her footsteps wherever she went.

"I knew you would be off before long," he sighed. "Well, tell me what day you mean to start, and I will order the funeral."

"Whose funeral?" she asked wonderingly. "Not mine, I hope?"

"No, mine. I'm going to cut my throat. Did you ever happen to set eyes on a man who was utterly and quite seriously in despair? If not it might interest you to take a look at me, because that is what I am."

Lady Belvoir availed herself of this permission, and there was a great deal more of tenderness and compassion than of wonderment in her gaze.

"Poor boy!" she exclaimed; "this is what comes of fancying one's self a cynic before one's beard is well grown. It serves you right; and yet I am sorry for you. What nonsense has been [illegible]

I have learned a beautiful lesson
[illegible] there,
[illegible]
[illegible]

You see this fragrant blossoms nodding,
Purple, crimson and pale rose tinged,
On slender stems too slight to hold them
With out the helping [illegible].

To its brown arms, so strong and rusty,
The little tendrils cling and cling;
The vine, withheld, in dust were lying—
A fallen, bruised and flowerless thing.

And yet the trunk itself was barren,
Unquickened at the summer's breath;
It bore no scent or sign of blossom;
But now it blooms again like this.

I think it must forget the sadness
Of its own broken life, and glow
With love for all the warmth and sunshine
That makes the sweetpeas bud and blow.

It may seem but a dreary failure,
Deadened and storm tossed, called with strife;
But it has helped to bear the blossoms
That crown another, fairer life.

—Bessie Chandler in Harper's Bazar.

KADOUR AND KATEL.

Kadour-ben-Cherifa, sergeant major of the Algerian sharpshooters, was believed to be dying when he was carried into old Rippert's sawmill on the Saberbach. For five long weeks he lived as in a dream, parched with fever and racked with the pain of his wound. Sometimes he thought he was in the battle again, shouting and bounding across the flax fields and hop gardens of Wissebourg; at other times he fancied himself once more at home in Algiers with his father, the kaid of Matimatas.

At last he opened his eyes and became dimly conscious of being in a cool clean room, with white curtains at the windows, and outside green branches waving, and light clouds passing before the sun. Near his bed sat a little sister of charity, watchful and quiet, wearing indeed no silver cross, no rosary, no veil, but, instead, two long braids of yellow hair falling over a black velvet bodice. From time to time some one would call "Katel, Katel!" and the peasant girl would go on tiptoe out of the room, and then the invalid would hear a clear young voice which seemed to him as refreshing as the sound of the brook that ran murmuring under the windows of the mill.

Kadour was ill for a long time, but the Ripperts took such good care of him that his wounds healed, and they concealed him so cleverly that the Prussians were not able to send him to die of cold in a casemate at Mayence. Soon he began to talk, showing his white teeth, then he took a few steps round the room, with one sleeve hanging empty and a great gaping hole in the midst of the embroidery, and his arm still bandaged and helpless. Then he went every day into the little garden, and Katel would bring out a little rug seated armchair for the invalid, putting it down in the warmest corner by the wall, where the grapes ripened the earliest, and Kadour, who, being a kaid's son, had studied in the Arabian college at Algiers, would thank her in French, which sounded a little barbarous, mingled as it was with some bezef and macach bono.

Without suspecting it the young Turk was falling under a spell. The easy joyety of the French maiden, who lived as free as a bird, her face unveiled even in the open air, and her window unbarred, astonished while it fascinated him. It was so very different from the walled up life of his countrywomen, with their white, lemon scented veils.

Katel, on her part, thought the stranger a little too dark skinned, but he had such a frank face and he hated the Prussians so! One thing displeased her terribly, and that was that over there in Algeria a man might have several wives. She could not understand that, and one day when Kadour, to tease her, said in his foreign jargon, "Kadour soon marry—have four wives—four"—the girl exclaimed angrily, "Four wives! Oh the villain, the pagan!"

The Turk burst out laughing as gleefully as a child, then, suddenly growing serious and silent, he fixed his great dark eyes upon her face. That was the beginning.

Kadour, completely cured, went home to his father, and one can imagine the festivities that were held in his honor in the land of the Matimatas. The reed flutes and the little drums played their sweetest airs to welcome him, and when the old kaid, seated in his doorway, saw coming down the cactus walk the beloved son whom he had thought dead he trembled as if with ague under his white burnous. For a whole month there was an uninterrupted series of diffas and fantasias, all the Kaids and Agas of the neighborhood disputed for the honor of entertaining Kadour-ben-Cherifa, and every evening in the Moorish cafes he was entreated to describe the battles in which he had fought.

But alas! all these fetes and honors did not make him happy. In the midst of the souvenirs of his childhood, his horses, his greyhounds, his arms and all the splendors of his father's mansion, there was one thing wanting—the artless, merry laugh of Katel. The little perpetual prattling of the Arab women, which had once made his heart beat with pleasure now fatigued and annoyed him. He would not admire their orange flower wreaths and wide trousers of pale rose color satin, but thought only of a pair of long braids having no pearl ornaments, yet shining like golden threads under the setting sun in a little Alsatian garden far away. And yet, if Kadour would but look about him, he could see a pair of beautiful black eyes made languid with kohl watching him from behind the grated windows of an old Aga's house not far distant. Kadour cared nothing for them, what he longed for was Katel's quick glance round the sick room to see if anything were wanting for his comfort; he sighed for the blue eyes in which the light played as brightly as in drops of clear spring water.

Little by little, however, the tender charm of those blue eyes, mingled with the memory of his convalescence and the soft tempered air of France, faded from his mind. At last Kadour had forgotten Katel, and throughout the valley of the Chelif nothing was talked of but his approaching marriage with Yamina the daughter of the Aga of Djendel.

One morning a long train of mules was seen wending toward town; Kadour-ben-Cherifa and his mother were going to buy the wedding presents. The whole day was spent by them in the bazars, choosing burnous shot with silver, Smyrna rugs, amber necklaces and earrings, and while he fingered the pretty jewels, the fine silks and fine stuffs Kadour thought only of Yamina. The Orient had regained him completely, but more by means of the force of habit and the influence of the atmosphere than by genuine heart bonds.

Toward evening the train of mules laden with couffins all puffed out with treasures turned down the street of the faubourg, when before the door of the Arabian bureau they found their way obstructed by a greater crowd. It was a party of immigrants who had just arrived from France; no preparations had been made for their reception, and the unfortunate strangers were vainly entreating aid and seeking information. Some of them were hopelessly sitting on their baggage, exhausted by their journey and annoyed by the curiosity of the crowd; while to add to their misery night was coming on, increasing with its darkness the desolateness of the unknown land.—Kadour looked at the exiles mechanically, but he [illegible]

[illegible] golden dreams had become reality, for he saw before him [illegible] golden hair of Katel. Yes, there she stood with old Rippert, her mother, and all the little children, far away from the sawmill on the rippling Saberbach, which still flowed past the abandoned home.

"Kadour!"

"Katel!"

He turned pale and she blushed slightly.

In a few minutes the exiles' difficulty was settled. The Kaid's house was large and the immigrants were welcome to install themselves therein until their little portion of land was accorded them. Quickly the mother gathered up the bundles and called together her children, who had begun already to play with the little natives; pell mell they were all put in the couffins among the silks and precious stuffs, and Katel laughed merrily at finding herself mounted in such grand style on an Arab mule. Kadour laughed, too, but less heartily, and with a sort of suppressed delight.

As night was falling round and the air growing cool he wrapped his former nurse in a beautiful striped burnous, one of the wedding presents, embroidered with pearls, and with its soft folds falling round her and the fringe glistening brightly she sat motionless and smiling, looking like a blonde houri escaped from the harem.

As Kadour gazed at her a thousand mad projects crossed his mind. He would break his troth with the Aga's daughter and marry Katel—none but Katel for him. And some day they would be returning together from the city, all alone in a lane of oleanders, she smiling at him on the mule's back, he holding her bridle as at present. Eagerly, still dreaming, he gave the signal for the departure of the train, but Katel stopped him, saying in her soft voice

"Wait a minute. Here comes my husband."

Katel was married. Poor Kadour!—From the French of Daudet in Buffalo Express.

IDEAS OF HELL.

Different Places Where the Good of Many Nations Have Located It.

We give a summary of the "hell" opinions of many religions and that of a famous astronomer. The hell of the ancient heathens was divided into two mansions—Elysium on the right hand, which was the abode of good men's souls, Tartarus on the left, a region of misery and torment, the awful abode of the damned. The ancient philosophers were of the opinion that the infernal regions were at an equal distance from all parts of the earth, which may be the foundation of the modern idea of hell being in the center of the earth.

The people of Hermione, contrary to the usual belief that one's own country is the best in the world, thought that it was a very short distance from their shores to the "lake that burneth for ever and ever;" for this reason the people of that country never put money in the mouths of their dead to pay passage to the land of oblivion. The ancient Jews placed hell in the center of the earth.

According to them, there were three passages leading to it, the first the wilderness, by which route Dathan, Korah and Abiram descended; the second is the sea, because it is written that "Jonah cried to God out of the belly of hell;" the third passage is in Jerusalem, because it is said "the fire of the Lord is in Zion, and his furnace is in Jerusalem." Mohammed said that hell has seven gates, the first for the Mussulman, the second for the Christians, the third for the Jews, the fourth for the Sabeans, the fifth for the Magians, the sixth for the Pagans and the seventh for the hypocrites of all religions.

Among modern philosophical opinions that of Mr. Whiston, the English scholar, was perhaps the most unique. The comets, according to Whiston, are so many hells appointed in their orbits to alternately carry the damned into the confines of the sun, and then to return them beyond the orb of Saturn, there to starve them in the regions of dismal cold.

Among the Christians there are two controverted questions in regard to hell—one concerning its locality, the other the duration of its torments.—St. Louis Republic.

There is in a pretentious office building in New York a gentleman with a serene and humorous cast of face, an erect figure and a smile that is as much identified with his countenance as are his drooping glasses and elusive blonde mustache. His name is James Goodwin, and he is a creator of ideas. He sells the ideas in the rough, makes a capital living and works on contentedly, without a trace of yearning for fame, yet the fame of many caricaturists and artists in New York belongs by right to him. Artists and newspaper illustrators are almost entirely destitute of humor, taken all in all, although there are one or two exceptions. The majority of them have the ability to draw cleverly, but the inventive and humorous faculties are not included in their mental and artistic make up. These men Mr. Goodwin supplies with ideas. His sketches are made roughly on brown paper and forwarded to different artists regularly every day. One week no less than nine pictures in the comic papers were inspired by the creator of ideas, although they are all signed by the names of prominent caricaturists in very large, black and prominent letters. Mr. Goodwin declares, by the way, that the artists lack assurance more than ability, and that if they only knew the trick they could create an idea as easily as he does it for them. But they do not seem able to find out the Goodwin secret.—Chicago Post.

Sympathy.

Let us cherish sympathy. By attention and exercise it may be improved in every man. It prepares the mind for receiving the impressions of virtue; and without it there can be no true politeness. Nothing is more odious than that insensibility which wraps a man up in himself and his own concerns, and prevents his being moved with either the joys or sorrows of another. This inhuman temper, however common, seems not to be natural to the soul of man, but to derive itself from the evil habits of levity, selfishness or pride, and will, therefore, be easily avoided by those who cultivated the opposite habits of generosity, humanity and good nature. Of these amiable affections the forms of common civility and the language of polite conversation are remarkably expressive; a proof that good breeding is founded in virtue and good sense, and that a kind and honest heart is the first requisite to an engaging deportment.—New York Ledger.

OUR NEIGHBOR STARS.

THERE ARE SCHOLARS WHO THINK THEY ARE INHABITED.

Science Has No Means of Proving It, but If Not the Case Why Were They Created? Some of the Conclusions Which Have Been Reached by the Professor.

"You remember," said the professor, as reported in the Cincinnati Times-Star, "my allusion some time ago to the fact that Mars resembled the earth in many of its observed features. It has for years been the dream of astronomy to prove that life exists in some or all of the millions of stars which surround us. The poetic astronomer reasons in this way: All things were created for the use and support of living beings. What use do the myriads of heavenly bodies subserve if there is no life? Would not the earth be altogether devoid of interest if life did not exist? If there was neither life nor thought what would be the significance of the universe? Reflections of this sort enkindle the lively imagination, and speculation as to what the science of astronomy will eventually reveal runs to extravagant extremes.

SUBJECTS OF SCIENCE IN THE FUTURE.

"Mathematical astronomers, like Newton and La Place, arouse by their marvelous calculations a high state of enthusiasm. But is this the only line along which we can work? The prediction of eclipses, the division of time, the mapping out of the courses of certain heavenly bodies with perfect accuracy, the discovery of comets, planets and suns—are these to be the final triumphs of the science which has revolutionized human thought at two or three stages of man's history? Let me answer in the words of an enthusiast: 'That is not the aim. Behold those millions of suns, similar to that which gives light to the earth, and, like it, sources of movement, activity and splendor; well, these are the subjects of the science of the future—the study of universal and eternal life. You are going to witness the dawn of a new day. Mathematical astronomy will give place to physical astronomy, to the true study of nature.'

"He goes on to say that by the study of nature he means the study of the conditions of life in the various parts of the universe, the physical condition of the planets, their geographical aspects, their climatology and their meteorology. It will probably be proved that Mars and Venus are peopled by thinking beings, that Jupiter has not yet reached a condition where life can be supported; that the conditions are such on Saturn that the beings which inhabit it are of an entirely different organization from our earth dwellers. Still further, astronomy will show that the earth is but one place in the celestial country, and that man is a citizen of the heavens. It will thus lead up to a new philosophy, the religion of superior minds.

NEITHER PROVED NOR DISPROVED.

"Such is the dream and such the final object of the telescopic search. The best that can be said for it from a scientific standpoint is that the facts observed neither prove it nor disprove it. There is only one body where the conditions are believed to be such as to support intelligent beings of our kind. But that is inconclusive. We can observe with our telescopes but three or four out of the millions of heavenly bodies. Moreover, there can be definite adaptation. Should our temperature be greatly raised or lowered, life as it exists now would disappear from the face of the earth; but perhaps there are forms of life which would thrive under the conditions which are fatal to us.

"Again, millions of years passed by before life got a foothold on our globe, according to the best evidence that we have, and for millions of years after life is extinct here it is expected that our planet will roll on through space. The period of intelligent man is but a moment out of an unmeasurable space of time. It is not probable that, if it were possible to visit each one of the 50,000,000 stars visible through our telescopes, we should find more than one or two at the best where our stage has just been reached.

"Whether the stars are inhabited or not, we know something about the appearance of the universe as presented at some of them by analogy.

"In the solar system of Gamma, in the constellation of Andromeda, instead of one sun, shining with a white light, any possible observer would behold three suns—a yellow sun, a blue sun and a green sun. As one of these suns would be setting another would be rising, and the color of objects would be constantly changing. When the blue sun should be in the zenith all the landscape—the rocks and the waters—would reflect the blue rays, throwing, perhaps, slight tinges of gold or green, due to one of the other suns as it was setting or rising.

"This is but a suggestion of some of the magnificent sights which must be presented near the multiple, triple and double stars, and we know of this through telescopic observation.

"The double stars especially love to show brilliant complementary colors, taking the hue that will contrast most charmingly with that of the next star—a rose colored one beside an emerald, a sapphire blue with a pale yellow primrose for a neighbor, white and ruby, gold and purple, sea green and orange, each increasing the beauties of the others.

"There is a nebula on the Southern Cross which is composed of 110 stars, of which eight of the more conspicuous ones are colored various shades of red, green and blue; the whole gives the appearance here of a rich piece of jewelry. What must be the infinite variety and beauty of the coloring in the near vicinity? Sir John Herschel said that the effect produced on him by this remarkable group was that of 'a superb piece of fancy jewelry.'"

The experiment of tanning leather with palmetto roots has been successfully tried at Apalachicola, Fla. The leather was as soft and pliable as the finest calf skin.

Feminine Cigar Dealers.

There are fifty-six feminine cigar manufacturers and dealers in snuff, tobacco and cigars in this city. Among them are Mrs. Cohn, of Hester street; Lena Banks, of Clinton street, and Mrs. J. L. Bysenger & Louisa Mayer, of East Eighty-ninth street. Mrs. Weingarten, of Broome street, makes a specialty of snuff and tobacco, which she manufactures with the help of a young son, two plump, pretty, peachy looking daughters standing to trade.
